HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS,

FROM THE VALLEYS BETWEEN EGYPT

AND

MOUNT SINAI,

IN THEIR ORIGINAL CHARACTERS, WITH TRANSLATIONS AND AN

ALPHABET.

BY SAMUEL SHARPE,

AUTHOR OF "THE HISTORY OF EGYPT."

WITH TWENTY PLATES.

Oh that my words were now written !
Oh that they were imprinted on [mount] Sephar !
That with an iron pen and a leaden hammer
They were chiselled into the rock for ever !

Job xix. 23, 24.

LONDON:
JOHN RUSSELL SMITH, 36, SOHO SQUARE.

P R E F A C E.

In the year 1820 Mr. G. F. Grey brought home from Egypt a number of valuable MSS. on papyrus in the enchorial character, and also copies of about two hundred inscriptions from the neighbourhood of Mount Serbal, chiefly from Wady Mocatteb. These latter were published in the "Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature for 1832." Some few are in Latin and Greek; but the larger number are in the unknown character, usually known by the name of the Sinaitic writing. These I am here endeavouring to explain.

The two best known works on these Sinaitic inscriptions are that by Professor Beer of Leipsic, of which the title is given below,* and the Rev. Charles Forster's "Sinai Photographed."

Professor Beer considers them as neither Hebrew nor Jewish, but written by Nabataeans, the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, mostly in the fourth century of our era. He forms an alphabet founded on the obvious Hebrew letters י נ ב ו y w, and with this alphabet he transcribes the inscriptions into Hebrew letters. But he makes very little attempt to translate them, and he thus offers no proof that his assumed alphabet is right. Had his characters when used consistently brought out a meaning which we could accept as probable, his efforts would have been of some value.

Mr. Forster proceeds differently. He supposes that these inscriptions were cut by the Israelites under Moses, and that they record the miracle of the Red Sea being divided to let the Israelites pass. He believes that he can read the Bible narrative in them by means of the Arabic language, into which he translates without transcribing.

Professor E. H. Palmer of Cambridge has had the advantage of examining the living rocks, and he is of opinion, as stated in his "Desert of the Exodus, 1871," that the Sinaitic inscriptions are in an Aramaean or Semitic dialect akin to Arabic; that while a few are Christian, a large portion are Pagan; that they are the work of traders and carriers, are of little worth, and have nothing whatever to do with the children of Israel. He adds, however, the valuable testimony to that of former travellers, that inscriptions are abundant on the road from Wady Feiran to the top of Serbal, and apparently uninjured by the weather.

Neither Professor Beer, nor Mr. Forster, nor Professor Palmer have satisfied the conditions required for us to accept their opinions as final. We cannot trust Professor Beer's transcripts without translations, nor Mr. Forster's translations without transcripts. Professor Palmer's work has neither transcripts nor translations. The decipherer should produce first an alphabet or table of characters, and then to some extent a language, and, lastly, a probable meaning to each sentence.

These three conditions are, I believe, complied with to a reasonable extent in the following pages. In Plates 2—20 are given rather more than one hundred of Mr. Grey's inscriptions which are to be deciphered. These are transcribed into the Hebrew letters by the help of the alphabet in Plate 1. They are then translated as Biblical Hebrew or Chaldee, and each is accompanied with such remarks as the case requires.

The conditions are complied with, as I say, to a reasonable extent only, because it will be seen that the alphabet is not so simple as to have only one character for each Hebrew letter; and the sense produced is sometimes doubtful. But these flaws in the proof are not greater than might be expected and allowed in the case of inscriptions possibly incorrectly copied, and written in the very smallest number of letters. The flaws would have been fewer, and the proof would perhaps have appeared more complete, if those inscriptions only had been produced which can be most certainly read.

In 1860, Dr. Lepsius of Berlin published a number of the Sinaitic inscriptions for the Prussian Government in his "Denkmäler aus Ägypten und Äthiopien." Several of these are Greek; of the others, some had been published by Mr. Grey, but some were new to us. But I have not been able conveniently to make use of Dr. Lepsius's work, and I have confined myself to Mr. Grey's inscriptions.

Though the Greek inscriptions are not translations of the others, they gave me the first hint to their meaning. Several begin with the word μνησθη, let him be remembered. This naturally leads us to look for the same thought in the others; and it was not difficult to take the first letters in the very first of our inscriptions for לכד ב, for a memorial. With this beginning the task is plain. If the inscriptions are in the Hebrew language, or in a dialect of Hebrew, it is by no means an indeterminate problem to find the meaning by putting such a force upon each of the unknown characters as shall make good sense, taking care that each character, wherever it is met with, bears the same force. This would be easy if all the inscriptions were of one age, and cut with the neatness which we find in the Greek and Roman inscriptions. But unfortunately this is not the case. Many are very carelessly cut—perhaps by unlettered persons, who did not give to a letter always the same form. Thus, though we cannot say that we have here several alphabets, yet we have more than one form for some of the letters, and some letters so badly formed as to leave their force doubtful. In many of Mr. Grey's inscriptions the letters are so entangled together, that I have thought it better to leave their deciphering unattempted, and they are not included in these pages.

This recovery of a piece of lost knowledge, of the power of reading an interesting page of history, will probably lead travellers to enlarge that page by bringing home copies of the other inscriptions on and near to Mount Serbal.

To those who have never amused themselves with deciphering writing in an unknown alphabet, an English example may be interesting and useful.

The following is an advertisement in the Daily News of October 5th, 1871 :—

N^C. pbcyet. mnpz. gb. Setaneo. Aanfa. Iqyfsj. be. m.
Jqnna. ms. ng. Manpqengq. be. ap. gyaa. seo. bz. cbegq.
Liyya. gb. ca. gqsa. Naa. zj. Naaa. hs. pne. csag. ebb.

The problem to be solved is the same in this case as in the Sinaiitic inscriptions, namely :—

Having a quantity of writing in unknown characters, let it be granted—

1st. That the language is known, or has been rightly guessed (in the one case English, in the other case Hebrew);

2nd. That the characters have been used consistently, and always have the same force throughout; and

3rd. That the writing contains sentences which were written in order to be understood.

Required the translation of the writing, and the force to be given to each character.

I add the answer, namely, the transcription of the above, and the alphabet.

In this case the transcription and the translation are the same.

1st line. Am coming back to England. Leave R. Ilives on b[oard].

2nd line. Shall be at Blackheath on L. C. till end of month.

3rd line. Write to me there. All ks aell. We can meet now.

THE ALPHABET.

For	a	read	l	For	j	read	s	For	a	read	e

"	i	"	r	"	r	"	—	"

It will be seen that the answer is not wholly satisfactory. In the alphabet we have the letter w twice, which should not be. In the transcription we have "All ks aell," which should probably be "All is well." We have single letters to which a meaning must be given by conjecture, and a proper name which may or may not be right. The writer, or the printer, may have made mistakes. But we cannot be far wrong in the meaning of the sentence. It may be usefully compared to our Sinaiitic inscriptions; the difficulties are nearly the same in each case. There is, however, this difference. In the English we have only about one hundred letters; all doubt would be removed if we had a larger quantity. In the Hebrew on the other hand, where we have a sufficiently large quantity, we have two other causes for uncertainty: the writing is by various hands, and the characters, where repeated, are not strictly of the same form; and, again, they are not divided for us into words. But in each case the possible errors are confined within very narrow limits, because in each language the ways in which the letters can be combined into words are limited in number.

ON THE SINAITIC INSCRIPTIONS.

INTRODUCTION.

WADY MOCATTEB, or the Sculptured Valley, is a small barren plain on the direct route from Egypt to the fertile oasis of Wady Feiran and to Mount Serbal, a route which must have been trod by the Israelites when they left Egypt for the conquest of the Amoritea on the east of the Jordan, and the after occupation of Canaan. It has gained its name from the inscriptions which are cut on the face of the rocks and on the boulders of sandstone, sprinkled over the valley for a distance of several miles. These inscriptions are also found in smaller numbers in the fertile Wady Feiran, at the northern foot of Serbal. But there the rocks do not offer the same convenience to the sculptor. Some are also found on the mountain itself. But few or none have been found on the eastern side of the peninsula of Sinai, that is, on the side furthest from Egypt. Thus their situation tells us very clearly that they were cut by travellers from Egypt to Serbal, who went no further, but returned to Egypt after visiting the mountain. They were not cut by travellers who, like the Israelites under Moses, passed across the whole of the peninsula; but we may safely say that they are the work of men who, as pilgrims from Egypt, had come to visit that holy spot.

The entrance to Wady Mocatteb is about thirty miles from Mount Serbal; and from that spot another valley, Wady Maghara, runs northward towards Sarabut el Khadim. This is equally barren with the former, and is marked by hieroglyphical inscriptions of a great age, some of the age of the pyramids, and others more modern, during the reigns of the great Theban kings. These were cut by the Egyptians who worked the copper mines in that neighbourhood; and the tombstones of the miners yet remsin there inscribed with hieroglyphics.

The inscriptions in Wady Mocatcb are not in hieroglyphics, but in an unknown character, which, however, is readily seen to be allied to the Hebrew, and indeed to contain some Hebrew lettera. They have usually and justly been considered the work of Jews; but those who have exsmined them are by no means agreed either as to their age or their purpose.

History gives us some little information which is of use in judging when these inscriptions were written; at least it tells us when there were Hebrews in Egypt who are likely to have visited this spot after it had gained its character for holiness.

First, when the Assyrians under Sennacherib invaded Judea, in the reign of Hezekiah, b.c. 714, there was a flight of Jews into Egypt, chiefly from the South Country, or the parts about Hebron, who hastened there for safety from their murderous armies. "They put their riches upon the shoulders of young asses, and their treasures upon the bunches of camels," and carried them to Egypt; and they are blamed by the prophet Isaish, in chsp. xxx., for doing so, for thua deserting their country in its distress.

Again, about a century later, when the Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar conquered Judea, and carried its principal inhabitants into captivity, there was a further flight of Jews into Egypt. At that time the prophet Jeremiah, and his friend Baruch, were both carried off into Egypt against their will by some of these fugitives.

During the years which followed each of these misfortunes there can have been no lack of Jews in Egypt who must have wished to visit the mountain which their Scriptures told them was the holy spot where Jehovah had spoken to Moses, and had delivered to him the Ten Commandments, and the Levitical Law.

It is not probable that any of them had come to Egypt through the peninsula of Sinai, and had visited Mount Serbal in passing. The route from Judea does not run so far to the south. The visita to Mount Serbal were made by Jews who had come from Egypt for the purpose.

By one of these Jews, who had fled from home and its dangers, we must suppose that Numbers xxxiii. was written. The writer seems to have had the earlier narrative in his hand, and he shows a full knowledge of the country from Egypt to Mount Shapher, or Serbal; but, as after that spot his knowledge becomes less exact, we judge that he was one of those pilgrims who went no further, but from Serbal returned to Egypt.

Many of the Jews who had thus settled in Egypt as cultivators of the soil, on the east side of the Delta, were led by the wise conduct of Ptolemy, about n.c. 300, to move westward, and establish themselves as merchants and tradesmen in the new city of Alexandria, where they gained a knowledge of the Greek tongue, and very much dropt the use of Hebrew. But about n.c. 175, Antiochus Epiphanes, the Greek King of Syria, by his mad cruelty drove a further body of Jews into Egypt, who again added numbers to the Hebrew colony in the east of the Delta. A few years afterwards, when the Maccabees gained for their country its independence, Onias IV, the deposed high priest came also to Egypt, and obtained leave of the then reigning Ptolemy to build a temple in the east of the Delta in rivalry to that at Jerusalem.

Thus history shows us that for many centuries, from the reign of Hezekiah, b.c. 700 downwards, there were always Jews in Egypt, most of whom would have wished to visit the holy mount in Sinai, and many of whom would have had the mesns to make that rather expensive pilgrimage, and who may have laboriously chiselled these rude inscriptions on the rocks.

Such journeys may at times have been stopt by the troubles of war, and the marches of armies on the eastern frontier of Egypt; but the peninsula of Sinai was not closed against the Jews until Christianity was made the established religion of the Roman empire by Constantine the Great, in the beginning of the fourth century.

Soon after that time monkish institutions spread among the Christians ; Christian monks settled in the desert of Sinai, and in the oasis of Feiran. The village of Feiran rose in importance. Learned Christians settled there, and then the Jewish pilgrims would hardly have ventured there. We must suppose that by the time of Constantine the Hebrew inscriptions very much ceased in Wady Mocattein, and then more particularly, but even before then, Greek inscriptions may have been cut there side by side with the older Hebrew inscriptions.

From Exodus iii. 1, and iv. 27, it clearly appears that Serbal was the mount of God, because Wady Feiran, at the foot of Serbal, is the only spot where Jethro's flocks could have been feeding. Again, from Exod. x., we learn that it was in order to keep the spring feast, afterwards called the Passover, that Moses asked the leave of Pharaoh for the Israelites to make a pilgrimage into the desert, and to sacrifice to Jehovah there. Hence it is very probable that the pilgrims who cut our inscriptions made their difficult and costly journeys at that stated time, and probably once only in a lifetime; for no inscription mentions a second visit. We must suppose that Exod. iii.-xi., containing an account of the proposed pilgrimage, was written after the account of the delivery of the Law in Chap. xix. 20, because it was from the delivery of the Law that the mountain gained its character for holiness and its name, the Mount of God.

Soon after the year A.D. 530, the Roman emperor, Justinian, built a new monastery for the monks of Sinai, about thirty miles to the east of Wady Feiran and Mount Serbal. It was called the Monastery of St. Catherine. Up to that time, it is probable that Serbal had always been considered as the holy mount of the Pentateuch. But after that time opinions changed; and the lofty peak overhanging Justinian's monastery, since called Mount St. Catherine, robbed Serbal of the honour of being visited as the holy mount, until in the present century our European travellers, by giving to us better maps of the country, have again restored to Mount Serbal its lost honour.

The original narrative of the Israelites' march out of Egypt has been thrown into some disorder, and cannot be satisfactorily compared with the maps. But the difficulty has been in part removed by the writer of Numbers xxxiii. 1-49; and from this we are further able to show that Serbal is the Holy Mount of the Pentateuch.

In Exodus xix., the Israelites, after fighting with Amalek at Rephidim, encamped in the desert before the mountain, and there they received the Ten Commandments. In verse 23, this mountain is called Mount Sinai. But this is not a distinctive name, as Sinai was the name of the whole, or at any rate of a large part, of the peninsula. In Exod. iii. 1, and xxxiii. 6, it is called Mount Horeb, which again may mean no more than the mountain of the desert, and it does not help us to fix its place. But in Numb. xxxiii. 23, where the geography of the route is distinctly traced, it is called Mount Shapher. Here the mountain has a name which will be useful to us, and place on the line of march, by the help of which we can find it on the map.

Thus the Israelites, after passing through the Red Sea, come (in Numb. xxxiii. 8) to Marsh, of Exod. xv. 23.

In verse 9, to Elim, of Exod. xv. 27.

In verse 10, they encamp by the sea.

In verses 11-15, the names of the places tell us that they are in the neighbourhood of the Egyptian copper mines: Dophkah, the crushing place; Alush, the pounding place; and Rephidim, the spreading place. They had left the sea coast, perhaps the place where the copper was shipped for Egypt, and had turned inland, towards the desert of Sinai, perhaps by the miners' road towards Sarabut el Khadim, where there are yet the ruins of an Egyptian temple. At Rephidim, the last of these three places, they fight with Amalek (Exod. xvii.). The men under Amalek may have been guards, or workmen at the mines, who would be met by the Israelites on the road between the sea, and the Egyptian buildings at Sarabut el Khadim. In verse 16, they encamp at Kibroth-hattaavah, or the burial-place at Taavah, the Tih range of Numb. xi. 34. This is a spot now well known, marked by the Egyptian tombstones sculptured with hieroglyphics.

From the burial-place the route would lead them southward through Wady Maghara to Wady Mocattein, the sculptured valley. This barren waterless plain could offer them no resting-place, and is not mentioned as one of the stations; but in verse 17 they encamp at Hazeroth, a village, which we must place at the entrance to the fertile oasis Wady Feiran.

Verses 18-21 mention four stations, of which the names all speak of fertility, and evidently point to Wady Feiran, namely Rithmah, the Broom-bushes; Rimmon-parez, the Pomegranate Gap; Libnah, the White Poplars; and Rissah, the Dew.

In verse 22, they are at Kehelathah, the place of their assemblies; and lastly, in verse 23, at Mount Shapher, the mountain of Exod. xix. 2.

Thua the writer of Numb. xxxiii. 1-49, explains the earlier narrative; and the mountain to which he leads the Israelites is clearly Mount Serbal. The name of Shaper, שָׁפֵר, which he gives to it, may mean beautiful; but the numerous inscriptions in the valleys on the Egyptian side of the mountain lead to the conjecture that its name had been Sephar, סֵפָר, written. The two letters v and p, so nearly alike in sound, are often changed one for the other; and indeed when one part of the nation used the Sh, the other used the S, as in the well-known case of Shibboleth and Sibboleth, in Judgea xii. 6.

This chapter of Numbers was perhaps written about the time of the carrying away of the Jews to Babylon; and we must suppose that before it was written the inscriptions around this mountain were already numerous enough to have gained for it the name of the Written Mountain. The wind and rain during more than two thousand years may have destroyed those early writings. We need not for our argument suppose that any of them now remain; but they were the forerunners of those which are now read and copied by our travellers.

Again, in Geneaia x. 30, this important mountain is called Sephar, סֵפָר, written, as may be shown when the translation of the authorized version is corrected. In that passage the Arab races are said to have their dwelling "from Mesha, as thou comest unto Sephar, a mount of the East." These words are meant to describe the whole of the then known inhabited part of Arabia; that is, the whole of the coast on the east side of the Red Sea. Mesa, as Gesenius rightly judged, may be Mousa, or Mauaid, at the southern end of that coast, while Mount Sephar in Sinai is at the northern end of the Arab district. The words סֵפָר הַר הַקָּדְשָׁה, to Sephar, a mount of the East, may as well be rendered to Sephar, the mount which was of old; for Sephar is not in the east, either as regards the Arab country or the Hebrew writer. The whole of the Arab coast is well described, from Mesha in the south to Serbal in the north. A needless difficulty had been made by describing Sephar as "a mount of the east."

It may be thought that while removing one difficulty we have brought on another, by describing Sephar in the Book of Geneaia as "the mount which was of old." But this is not an early passage. The generations of Shem, Ham, and Japheth are complete without the added passage of x. 21-xi. 9. The original passage may have been written in Solomon's reign; it makes the Arabs to be children of Ham; and it brings from Shem only Abraham's descendants. The added passage was written much later, and it classes the Arabs more naturally as Semites; and it mentions many more tribes of men, after a further knowledge of geography had been gained. The time when it was written may be guessed from the names mentioned. The mention of Elam tells us that it was written after Sennacherib, in the reign of Hezekiah, had brought Elamitea in his army to the invasion of Judea, as is said in Iaaiah xxii. 6; and the omission of the Peraian, that it was written before the conquest of Babylon by Cyrus, which gave the Jews an acquaintance with Persia, as seen in Ezekiel xxvii. 10, and xxxviii. 5. After that time the Elamitea would not be classed with the Assyrians, as they are in this passage.

Thus it would seem that before the return from captivity, as remarked upon Numbers xxxiii., the inscriptions on Serbal were so numerous that it had gained the name of Sephar, written; its place in the earlier narrative naturally gave to it the further name of "the mountain which was of old." Serbal is a sienite mountain, and though not the most lofty in the peninsula, is the most striking and remarkable.

But while history thus leads us to think that there were numerous inscriptions on the Holy Mountain, even as early as the reign of Hezekiah, it is clear that these inscriptions in Wady Mocatteb, at a distance of ten and twenty miles from the mountain, cannot be those which gave to it its name. They have given to the valley the name of the Sculptured Valley; there must have been others which gave to the mountain its name of the Written Mountain. We may conjecture that of the two the inscriptions in the valley are the more modern; that the custom of cutting such was begun upon the mountain, and afterwards continued in the valley below. We may even conjecture the reason for this. The mountain is of hard sienite; travellers must have found it very difficult to cut their letters on such stone; and after a time some may have contented themselves with carving on the sandstone in the valley, which, though hard, is not so hard as the sienite. When the easier custom was once begun, it was naturally continued. Moreover, of the numerous Jews who would wish to make a pilgrimage from Egypt to the Holy Mount, many might content themselves with getting a sight of it. They may have come as far as Mocatteb and Feiran without having the time or the wish to climb the mountain. Both they and their beasts may have been weary after a journey of two hundred miles from the banks of the Nile.

Thus, if we may suppose that the writings on the rocks of Sinai extend over more than a thousand years, say from the reign of Hezekiah till after the reign of the emperor Constantine, we must suppose that those which have been copied from Wady Mocatteb are not the oldest. There yet remain at the top of Mount Serbal traces of letters scratched on the hard sienite, less deeply cut and perhaps of a ruder form than those in Wady Mocatteb. These await some active intelligent traveller, who may make copies of them, and thus bring home materials for a further knowledge of the Hebrew people, of their language, and of the forms of their letters.

Thus far we have been looking on these inscriptions in what has been called the Unknown Character, and on their probable history, without regard to their contents. On deciphering them they appear to be Hebrew or Chaldee, each a short sentence containing a pious prayer to Jehovah for the welfare of the nation, and of Jerusalem in its ruined state. We find no mention of a king—the monarchy had passed away. We find no mention of the Babylonians and their cruelty; that had been forgotten in later trouble; no certain mention of the Captivity, but we find one continued lament for the scattered state of the nation, and the ruined condition of the city. It would seem as if it had been the wish of the unhappy writers to show us how many words the language contained by which they could describe the sad state of their city, country, and nation, as cut short, laid waste, trodden down, crushed, broken, ruined, despised, rejected, cast out, scattered, wandering, and so forth.

The inscriptions usually end with the word Jao, or Jehovah, and begin with either Dekerun or Shalem. Dekerun may mean "a memorial" to preserve the memory of the writer or of the nation; and in this sense the writers of No. 91a, and No. 145b, speak of their inscriptions on the rock as a token which is to be "tied about the neck." But the word is more often here used with its Levitical meaning, as an offering to Jehovah. When the worshipper brought his animal to the altar at Jerusalem, the larger part of it was put aside to be cooked for the priests, and only a small portion was burnt on the altar. This portion was called "a memorial," as representing the whole, and thus any offering to Jehovah was called "a memorial." In that sense the word is used in these inscriptions. So the word Shalem, which may be taken as a verb, "Do thou prosper, or reward," rather means "a peace offering." Each of these inscriptions, being a proof that the religious pilgrimage had been performed, was an offering made to Jehovah. In No. 87 and No. 147, this offering is said to be made in performance of a religious vow.

Thus, when these inscriptions were written, the regard for the Levitical Law was so far weakened that its ceremonial commands were understood figuratively; its very words had gained a new meaning. The "peace offering," and the "memorial" portion of the burnt offering, were now duly paid by a prayer to Heaven, and not by an animal slain upon the altar. The writings of Isaish, the lapse of time, and intercourse with foreign countries, had made great changes in religion. Two or three of our inscriptions, however, are said to be only part of the memorial; and we must suppose that the other part was the portion of an animal burnt on the altar.

Every one of the writers, when giving a name to God, uses the word Jao. Not one uses the word Elohim. One, indeed, writes El-Shadeh-Jao, God almighty, Jehovah. This is what we should naturally look for. The outcasts who escaped into Egypt were mostly Jews, natives of Judea, who used the name of Jehovah; the Israelites of the north, who used the name of Elohim, could not so easily escape into Egypt when their country was invaded.

The important word Jao, or Jehovah, is met with more than fifty times in these inscriptions. Twenty times it is written with the letter נ between two simple strokes. This I read as נָנָ, because there is seldom any distinction made between the נ and the נ. Nearly forty times it is written with the letter נ between the same two simple strokes. This I read as the same word, believing that the writer purposely omitted one stroke in his letter, and that he left it purposely incomplete, writing נ for נ. The frequency with which the word appears makes its meaning certain; and there is equally little room for doubt about how it was spelt. It agrees with what we learn from the Gnostic gems, and from the Ecclesiastical historians, who tell us that the sacred name, written as נָנָ, was pronounced IAΩ. The writers here seem to have written it as it was colloquially pronounced.

In other inscriptions we have two marks thus, =, for the word Jehovah. This sign cannot be deciphered with the same certainty as the letters mentioned above, because it is met with only four times. But its place in each sentence leaves very little room for doubt.

Another interesting word, of which the meaning is safely determined by its place in the sentence, is Jerusalem. This long word the writers have twelve times represented by two single strokes thus, ׁ, and three times by yy. The frequency with which we meet with the word makes its meaning certain. I venture to guess that ׁ were meant for the first letters of the "City of Jerusalem," and yy for the first letters of a "ruined heap of ruins."

These inscriptions have not the regularity of those cut by the Greeks, Romans, Assyrians, and Babylonians, people who had been used to carve on stone. They have often the easy and careless flow of penmanship; and they thus teach us that they were first drawn upon the rock with a pen or brush, and afterwards cut in with an iron pointed chisel and a hammer. These inscriptions are not like the chance inscriptions by Greek and Roman travellers on the foot of the musical statue at Thebes. They are the very purpose of the pilgrimage. In order to cut them the traveller came prepared with suitable tools, such as he could not meet with in the desert. It was his intention to complete his pilgrimage by cutting one of these pious inscriptions.

They are often on lofty rocks, in places chosen perhaps that the writing may be out of harm's way. The writer sat on his beast while he wrote them. The patient camel offered no hindrance to this work; but the horse was not always so quiet and obedient. The writer of No. 69 explains this difficulty, and says he is "slipping off, is thrown, the horse is rearing."

The journey from Egypt to Mount Serbal and back again is about four hundred miles; it cannot be completed in much less than a month. The traveller must have been a man of some substance, having with him a beast or beasts, whether camel, horse, or ass, to carry his tent and his food, with companions or servants to help him to pitch his tent, and to cook his morning and evening meals. If he made the journey on foot, he was twice as long on the road. The short pointed iron stakes, the tent-pins which fixed his tent, and the leaden hammer which drove them into the ground, may have been the tools which cut the letters in the sandstone rock. He must have brought with him a brush and some kind of paint, or gum with which paint could be made, to trace the letters before they were cut. The reed pen, which when pointed is used for writing on parchment or papyrus, if cut square at the end and hammered flat, becomes a fibrous brush of about a quarter of an inch wide. Such may have been the brush by which the letters were traced; and it agrees with the even width of the strokes. The paint needed was only such as would remain upon the rock during the hour spent in cutting the letters, but some of it remains on Serbal to this day.

If we attempt to put into chronological order all that we know about the pilgrimages to Mount Serbal and the writing in the neighbourhood, adding the probable dates for convenience' sake, but without pretending that they are right, it is as follows:—

b.c. 1030, or thereabouts, in the time of Samuel and Saul, was written the history of the march of the Israelites out of Egypt, with the delivery of the Law in Sinai. This history gave to the mountain its holy character (Exod. xix. 3).

It is only natural to suppose that in the reigns of Solomon and his successors many Jews may have made visits of curiosity and of devotion to this mountain, and they may have given to it the name of the Mount of God.

b.c. 870, in the reign of Jehoshaphat, many large additions were made to the Book of Exodus, including chap. iii.—xi., in which Moses asks leave of Pharaoh for the Israelites to make a religious pilgrimage into the desert, and to sacrifice to Jehovah there. In these chapters the mountain is called the Mount of God; and thus we see that they were written after the history of the delivery of the Law, and after the custom had arisen of visiting that holy spot.

n.c. 714, when the Assyrians under Sennacherib invaded Judea, and exercised great cruelty towards the inhabitants, a number of Jews left their homes, where life was not safe, and they fled to Egypt for safety (Isaiah xxx. 6, 7). When these men had established themselves on the banks of the Nile, and were at leisure from the cares of life, some of them may have performed the pilgrimage to the Mount of God, in Sinai, and cut pious inscriptions on the rocks. Even then, or earlier, the writings there were numerous enough to gain for it the name of Sephar, or the written mountain.

b.c. 700, in the reign of Hezekiah, or perhaps in the reign of his successor, was written Genesis x. 22—xi. 9, containing a correction to the original history of the descent of nations from Noah. Here the writer describes this mountain as “Sephar, the mountain which was of old,” thus telling us that it was already celebrated both for the early doings there at the time of the Exodus, and for the inscriptions which had been since cut there.

At the same time Numbers xxxiii. 1—49 may have been written by some Jew, a pilgrim from Egypt to the holy mount. By his geographical accuracy he tells us that this mount was Mount Serbal, overhanging Wady Feiran; and he gives to it the name of Mount Shephar, which is only another way of writing Sephar.

In my “History of the Hebrew Nation and its Literature,” I have given reasons for thinking that about the time of the return from the Captivity, b.c. 538, the writer of the Book of Job visited Egypt and Arabia; and he accurately describes these inscriptions on and near Mount Serbal; and lets us understand that he had visited the spot, when he says in chap. xix. 23, 24—

Oh that my words were now engraved!
Oh that they were imprinted on [mount] Sephar!
That with an iron pen and a leaden hammer
They were chiselled into the rock for ever!

Not many of the inscriptions in this collection can claim to be so old as the return from the Captivity in Babylon, and to be those seen by the writer of Job. Nor are our inscriptions from the mountain itself; they are from Wady Mocatteb, on the road from Egypt to the mountain. We must wait until other travellers to this interesting spot have copied the inscriptions on the road up Mount Serbal from Feiran, and those on the summit of Serbal itself, before we can hope to see the oldest of these Hebrew inscriptions. This publication may perhaps remind our travellers of what a harvest there is there waiting for some reapers to gather. Even in Wady Mocatteb there remains a gleaning which should not be overlooked.

For the date of the larger part of these inscriptions we have very little to guide us. They for the most part tell us of the unhappy condition of the people in words which would suit almost any century after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 589; and we must be careful not to make too much of a word or two which seem to point to an exact time. No. 47, however, tells us that the people have been "removed far away," in the very words used in Ezek. xi. 15, 16. No. 48a is a prayer for the people which "is not;" and though such a word would equally well suit the later destruction of the city by the Romans, yet as this inscription is in the very earliest style of character, and by its position on the piece of rock is shown to be earlier than one which we shall give to the time of Nehemiah, it seems to belong to the time of the Captivity. No. 128 also is a prayer for the nation that is "driven forth," and for the "city that remaineth." The "remainder of the city" is also prayed for in later inscriptions; but the two thoughts here mentioned, taken together, place it at the earlier time. It is quite possible that these inscriptions may have been written earlier than B.C. 538, when Cyrus allowed the captives to return home.

No. 48b, which is by a different hand from that of No. 48a, already mentioned, and is therefore of a later date, is a prayer for the "counsel of the wall," which we may suppose to be Nehemiah's proposal to rebuild it, B.C. 445. Nehemiah's enemies charged him with a wish to prepare for a rebellion against the Persians. But his wall was not one to oppose an army, though it might keep off robbers, and allow the inhabitants of Jerusalem to sleep at night without fear. The word here used for the wall is not that used in the Bible for the fortification of the city, and may have been chosen to mark the character of Nehemiah's structure. No. 31 is also a prayer "to establish the counsel." This does not mention the purpose of the counsel; but it belongs to a time when Jerusalem was governing itself, and is of the oldest form of letter, and probably of the same date as the last.

During the three centuries of quiet which the Jews enjoyed under their Persian and then their Greek masters, others of our inscriptions were probably written; but, with the above exceptions, I can discover no peculiarity in them by which to fix their date. But when troubles came upon the nation, the case is altered. Our pilgrims then express their feelings more pointedly; and we are able with more confidence to put a date to their writings.

No. 54 we may suppose to be of the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, whose mad cruelty drove many of the Jews to seek safety in Egypt. It is a prayer for "the city of sighs." But a Jew living in Egypt was not safe from the power of the oppressor; Antiochus overran Lower Egypt for three years together, as is said in Isaiah xx., where he is called the King of Assyria; hence our pilgrim expresses his anger in a guarded manner, and his prayer is "Slay the Buffalo." The Buffalo, in the Authorized Version the Unicorn, is a name often used in the Bible figuratively for Egypt; but Egypt is not here meant. A Jew's only wish for Egypt was that it had been strong enough to help them against their enemies. We must suppose that when the writer wrote RAM, the buffalo, he meant to be understood as ARM, the Syrians. In this guarded way the writer of Jerem. xxv. 26, threatens the King of Sheshak, when it was not safe to write against Babylon; but the later writer of Jerem. li. 41, when Babylon was overthrown, explains the riddle. If the alphabet is read backwards, the letters Sh, Sh, K, will represent B,B,L, or Babylon. The writing the alphabet backwards in one case explains the writing the word backwards in the other.

No. 113 contains the prayer, "Utterly destroy the rich men," a prayer which, like that in No. 54, must be understood as having a double meaning. The word "rich men" becomes "Assyrians" by a change of the first letter; and, as we have remarked, the Greco-Syrian kings who held Syria, Assyria, and Babylonia, are sometimes called kings of Assyria in the Bible.

No. 2b, with a prayer for the afflicted nation, adds "Strangle*, O Jehovah." This unknown character probably points to the Greco-Syrians, people who were oppressing the Jews, but from whom they might reasonably hope to get free.

This conjecture is strengthened by No. 71, where we have the same unknown character. The nation or the city is "a ruin fainting [under this enemy], profaned, and trodden down." In Psalm lxxiv., which is of this time, it is said,—

Now the whole carved work [of the temple] at once
They break down with axes and hammers.
They have cast fire into the Sanctuary,
They have crushed [literally profaned] the Tabernacle of thy name to the ground.

In the Psalm, and in our inscription, we have the same word used—"profaned."

No. 84 may, perhaps, be of the same time, when Antiochus had in his violence stopped the daily sacrifices in the Temple, and forbidden all Jewish rites, and had carried away to Antioch the gold and silver vessels of the Temple, the altar of incense, the lampstand, the table for the ceremonial bread, the censers, and the sprinkling vessels. Our pilgrim, praying as usual for the "crushed city," adds that "the renowned ornament is cut off."

After a time the unhappy people were roused into rebellion; and when at length the rebellion was successful, then we find one of our pilgrims venturing to speak plainly. No. 81 is clearly of the time of the Maccabee struggle for independence against the Greco-Syrian kings, which began b.c. 166. Its prayer is "Slaughter, O Jehovah, the Syrians," words which came very naturally from one who may have been driven away from the "afflicted Jerusalem" by the cruelties of Antiochus Epiphanes. This was probably not written till after the death of Epiphanes, when, though the struggle was not over, a Jew was at least safe in Egypt.

No. 91 contains a series of several inscriptions which belong to the very last days of the struggle for independence, when the Greco-Syrians were weakened by quarrels among themselves, and the prospects of the Jews grew brighter. No. 91a declares that this inscription is "a print-mark of rejoicing." No. 91b says that "the guiltless city is awakened," and prays, "Clothe it, O Jehovah." No. 91c prays for "rest for one who is disturbed, the sleeper who is awakened." No. 91d prays for "the sick heap of ruins," and "Help Thou to beautify the piece cut short," or the remnant. No. 91e says that "the heap of ruins sings for joy." The prayer of No. 91f is, "Raise up her that has been defiled," a very natural description of Jerusalem after the attempt of Epiphanes to change the religion of the country.

After this we have a change of tone. No. 91g, though on the same piece of rock, may be a little later. Let us suppose that, the excitement of the success being over, time is allowed to observe the state of affairs; and this writer says, "The ruined heap groans."

When the Maccabees had been so far successful as to have gained possession of Jerusalem, they yet were not masters of the castle. That fortress, standing on the rock which overhangs the temple-yard, was held against them for twenty years, while Judas and his brothers were doing their best to reduce the disturbed country to order. No. 91h prays for "the plundered city on the outside of the rock; that the bald may rejoice, and that she that has been set in order may be refreshed." As these latter inscriptions follow one another on the same piece of sandstone, their chronological order is certain.

In the same way, No. 114a is on behalf of "the lessened portion of the crushed city."

No. 21 and No. 24 each have a prayer for "her that has broken free," meaning that has broken the yoke; and No. 41 adds that "she was broken off from a wicked people." These, then, are of the time of the Maccabee independence.

No. 22, No. 82, No. 121, and No. 124 all, perhaps, may belong to this happier time. They pray for the city which has been awakened, purified, and is to be set in order.

In the year b.c. 142 Simon the Maccabee had permission given to him to coin money; and he put upon his coins the words "Shekel of Israel," written in the Samaritan characters. He chose the letters for his coins probably for the same reason that he chose its name "of Israel," because the leaders of the Jews were even then in arms against him, having disapproved of the rebellion. These coins of Simon have hitherto been thought the earliest examples of Hebrew writing; but they must now give place to some of these inscriptions.

In the year B.C. 185 John Hyrcanus succeeded to the chief priesthood of Jerusalem on the death of his father Simon, who had been forced to pay a yearly tribute to the King of Syria. But John was yet more independent. He was able to withhold the tribute, and he coined money in the name of "John the high priest and the Confederation of the Jews." This word, "the Confederation," we find in two of our inscriptions. No. 29 is on behalf of "the bold Confederation," while No. 30 is simply for "the Confederation of Jerusalem."

From the year B.C. 160 until the year A.D. 70, the Jews of Egypt had been allowed to have a temple and an altar of sacrifice at Onias or On, a town on the west side of the Delta. It is mentioned in Isaiah xix. 19. At that altar the writer of No. 178 may have offered his lamb to the priest, and seen a portion burnt as a memorial to Jehovah, and then he calls his inscription in Wady Mocatteb only "a part of the memorial." He was an Alexandrian Jew, named Baruk, and he completes his inscription by giving the names of his father, his grandfather, and his great-grandfather in the Greek language.

The large number which speak of the city as a heap of ruins must be divided between the hundred and fifty years before the Christian era and the hundred years after that era, when the city was again destroyed by the Romans. But more of them probably belong to the earlier than to the latter time, because under the Romans the Jews in Egypt were not so free to make this pious pilgrimage to Sinai as at the former time under the Ptolemies. We have to think not only of the words of the inscriptions, but of when the Jews were most at liberty to cut them.

No inscription mentions any king or ruler of the nation by name. The feelings of the Jews in the later days were not monarchical; and the kings who rose after the year B.C. 106, and struggled with one another for power, little deserved the good wishes of those who were anxious for the welfare of the nation.

Several of our inscriptions are by Christian Jews, as is seen from the symbol of the cross. These are No. 11 and No. 111, whose prayer is yet for the nation; No. 19, whose writer may have suffered under persecution, as its words are "the fire of purification," and No. 86b, which is on behalf of what remains of the oppressed nation, and on behalf of "the society [or perhaps sect] of the cross."

No. 130 also is on behalf of "the society which is spit upon." If we may be guided by the last, and suppose this particular word "society" to have gained a special meaning, this also may be supposed to be the memorial offering of a Christian Jew.

The writer of No. 85, on the other hand, uses the symbol of the cross only to express his hatred of it, and prays, "tread down lying Christianity."

No. 142a, which is by a Christian Jew, reminds us of the state of Jerusalem when the Apostle Paul in his missionary journeys collected alms for the poor of Jerusalem; it ends with a prayer for "the poor." No. 80a has the same prayer.

The writer of No. 138 shows his displeasure at the conduct of the rulers in Jerusalem, who often brought trouble on their country, and on those Jews who were living in Egypt, by attempting a hopeless struggle against their Roman conquerors. He calls the city "perverse, cursed, stubborn." In No. 158, the writer, more an Israelite than a Jew, or more citizen of the world than a patriot, speaks of the "braying of Jesusalem." The writer of No. 173, also, does not approve of these complaints about the state of Jerusalem and Judea. He blames these inscriptions in Wady Mocatteb, and writes up in a neighbouring valley, near to Sarabet el Khadim, "False compassion."

Perhaps the most modern of our inscriptions are by Gnostic

Jews. No. 25 shows some of the whimsical peculiarities of that sect, and begs for God's favour towards "the he-he-he-he, injured, remembered, desired." This remarkable word, if we may judge from other Gnostic writings, means the Temple of Jerusalem. It ends with a prayer for "the outside" (perhaps the Jews in dispersion), and that "an answer may be given to the knowledge," or to Gnosticism, meaning to this enigmatical prayer. No. 75 is even yet more whimsical. The words are so arranged in their four lines that by reading downwards you can find hidden in them the same Gnostic word, he-he-he-he.

Thus we have a series of religious inscriptions running back from the early ages of Christianity, many certainly as far back as to the time of the Maccabee revolt, others probably to the time of Nehemiah, and others possibly to the time of the Captivity. They all bear witness to one important fact, that the Jews, who were living in Egypt and cut these writings on the rocks, believed that Mount Serbal was the Mount of God mentioned in the Pentateuch.

Our pilgrims often show an acquaintance with the Levitical Law. Thus No. 156 describes the writing as a peace offering. But the writer, remembering that a peace offering was a love feast to be shared with the worshipper's friends and the priest, says that his inscription in the desert, at a distance from his friends, is "the peace offering of a lonely feast." By the Levitical Law, a poor woman, on her recovery to health after childbirth, if not rich enough to bring two young pigeons to the priest, might bring a tenth part of an ephah of flour. Of this humble gift, a memorial portion only was burnt on the altar, and its ashes cast out with the bone ashes of the other offerings. Hence the writer of No. 139 uses the very humblest of terms when he says that his inscription, his memorial, is "the bone ashes of a woman who has been unwell." No. 114a is called a "lean peace offering;" and No. 32 is "a lean portion," using the word which in Leviticus vii. 33 is used for the priest's portion of the animal.

Others, such as No. 113, in order to tell us that the priest has not been forgotten, say the inscription is "a part of the peace offering." One, No. 184, says that he has given "the kneaded dough." These may have been written while there was an altar and a priesthood at the city of Onion.

Many of the writers show a knowledge of other parts of the Bible, or at least use words in a manner which looks as if they were familiar with the Scriptures. The writer of No. 27a calls the country "a rib," and thus copies Daniel vii. 5, where the three kingdoms conquered by the Medes are three ribs in the bear's mouth. He prays for a "white garment" for the congregation or nation: this thought he may have borrowed from Daniel vii. 9. When he would pray for the anointed priesthood of the conquered Jerusalem, his words are "for the compound of the ruined heap," meaning the sacred oil which is described in Exod. xxx. 25, as "a compound compounded after the art of the apothecary," and which was never to be used except for anointing the priest. No. 54 says "the righteous people are willing," as if in answer to the conditional promise in Isaiah i. 19, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land." No. 72 calls the nation or city "a stone to be desired," as if thinking of Psalm cxviii. 22, "the stone which the builders rejected." No. 1 has the prayer, "Keep alive the broken lamp of the people," agreeably to the promise given to Solomon in 1 Kings xi. 36, that there should be "always a lamp for David my servant in Jerusalem." The prophet Amos, in chap. iii. 12, had compared half-ruined Israel to two legs and the piece of one ear of a sheep which were left when a lion had devoured the rest; and No. 107, when the nation was yet more crushed, calls it "the tail cut off from a sheep." Isaiah, in chap. xxix. 1, calls Jerusalem "the Lion of God;" and No. 95a prays for "the ruins of the Lion."

Some few of our inscriptions contain prayers for the writer himself, as No. 178, already mentioned; and two, No. 1 and No. 96b, join with themselves their wives, who, as being foreigners, are called friends or companions: the honourable name of wife was denied to them by the Levitical Law. No. 144, in a less religious spirit, is a memorial from his "strong camel;" and No. 159 is

"the peace offering of his fat horse." No. 167 is for the foal of his camel, which was probably then born in the desert.

THE PRONUNCIATION AND LANGUAGE.

Some peculiarities of pronunciation may be traced in these inscriptions, chiefly arising from the gutturals in the Hebrew language. The Jews in Egypt would seem to have been less fond of the guttural sound; and, finding it troublesome, they sometimes hardened it into a consonant, and sometimes neglected it. Thus they hardened into ככְר; and, on the other hand, they softened יַרְעַי into יַרְעִי. The y they so far treated as a vowel as to use it for the Chaldee final s, in the words יַפְרֵי and יַמְרֵי for יַפְרֵי and יַמְרֵי. As the harsh Hebrew x was softened by the Chaldees into y, and אַרְעָא was written יַאֲרָא, here it is yet further softened, and we have the word גַּרְעָא twice spelt simply גַּרְעָא. We have also the words גַּרְעָא and גַּדְעָא both softened into גַּרְעִי and גַּדְעִי.

It is certainly by no carelessness of the writers that we find the letter x often divided into two parts, which then represent the two letters pw. In No. 129, the division is made particularly clear by the space between them; and at the same time it is equally clear that the two letters together stand for the one letter x. This letter is supposed to have had the harsh sound of TZ; and from the Septuagint we learn that the Alexandrian Greeks treated it as S. Fuerst, however, in his Lexicon, has well shown that it was occasionally interchanged with the p, as we have seen above; and its form in these inscriptions tells us that at one time it had the sound of pw, being a compound character formed by the union of those two.

Another way in which the language was softened to the ear, was by the frequent insertion of the letter n into the middle of a word, and the addition of n at the end. Other peculiarities in the words it would be rash to dwell upon. The art of spelling had not then been reduced to regularity. The spelling in the Hebrew Scriptures is by no means uniform. The spelling in the English language did not become regular till more than two centuries after the invention of printing.

As a peculiarity of language, we may mention נְנֻ used for the objective me. As new examples of verbs in the unusual conjugation Pilpel, we have רְגֹנְנַן, to sing triumphantly, and פְּרֹפְנַן, thoroughly purified. The doubled form was used probably to strengthen the meaning. The conjugations Hiphil and Niphal are not common here.

It is customary with the writers on the Hebrew language to produce an assumed root for a word which may not itself be in the form of a root-word. In some cases these inscriptions give us the root required, which thus need no longer be called "assumed." In No. 84, we have the word יַפְרֵי, the regular imperative of יַפְרֵי a root assumed by Geaeinius. In No. 49 we have the word פְּרֹנְנַן, girded with sackcloth, a root assumed by Gesenius for the noun פְּנַן. In No. 172 we have נְלֹעַן, and in No. 125 we have נְלֹעַן, both as participles for cut down. This verb had before been known only in the conjugation Hiphil. In No. 41, we have יַגְנֵן, save, the imperative of יַגְנֵן, a verb hitherto known only in Hiphil and Niphal.

In the natural wish not to use more letters than are absolutely necessary, the copulative "and" is once only met in these inscriptions, and the article "the" before a substantive very rarely. It is, however, often used before an adjective, when it is to be translated "that which is."

THE SINAITIC ALPHABET.

In these inscriptions there is the usual variety of forms for each letter, due to the carelessness of the writer, or of the sculptor who cut them into the stone, or of the copier; and due also to the difference in their age.

n. We have two distinct forms for this letter. n 1 and its varieties are the most common. n 4 and its varieties approach the printed letter. n 6, from our most modern inscription, is close to the printed letter.

ג is a very marked letter, except when it is made to face the wrong way, when it approaches the p. In form it is allied to the Roman P.

ג is nearly the same as the printed letter, except in its position; it lies down.

ג is nearly the printed letter.

נ is of the Syriac printed form, except sometimes in the word Jehovah, when we have the נ. But if we are right in our conjecture that in the sacred name the נ was purposely written for an unfinished נ, it proves that the letter נ, so formed, was already in use, although not met with in these inscriptions.

נ is often a simple stroke, not to be distinguished from נ, נ, or נ. Sometimes it slopes, as נ(3). Sometimes as in נ(1) it is the Egyptian enchorial letter, copied from the horned serpent, and then it approaches the y.

נ should be like the printed letter, but sometimes it is a simple stroke, and sometimes the head becomes so enlarged as to give it a different character.

נ is like the printed letter. נ 4 is reversed.

ו is a simple stroke, and often not distinguished from נ, נ, or נ. Sometimes it is a long stroke, and thus very unlike the printed letter.

ו is like the printed letter, except that when badly made it approaches ג, or becomes a simple curved stroke.

ה is usually a simple angle; often like the Roman L, though sometimes it approaches the Greek small letter.

ה is usually like the printed final letter. It is only in a few of the earliest inscriptions that we have the initial form. But no distinction is shown in the use of these two characters.

ף, when laid on one side, is like the printed letter. It is a compound letter formed of w and p joined together. But the two strokes are often not joined, and then it might be taken for pw.

ף is like the printed letter, but facing the other way. ף 1 is the early Greek Quoppa.

ף is the printed letter leaning backwards, but often a mere wavy line. ף 4 is from our most modern inscription.

ף is of two forms; one is half the ף, and the other, which is the more modern, is like the printed letter.

ן is a cross. The figure of a simple cross has at all times been used for a mark or signature; and ן, the name of this old letter, came in Hebrew to mean a mark, as in Ezek. ix. 4, and a Signature, as in Job xxxi. 35. Here, when Job wishes that the accusation against him and his defence should both be in writing, he says, “Behold my signature,” my ן.

From the use of the letter T as a simple mark, we gain the origin of the names of the letters of the alphabeta. These names have remained less corrupted in Greek than in Hebrew; and there we have Be-ta, a mark for B, Ze-ta, E-ta, The-ta, Io-ta, all compounded of Tu, a mark. The L in some of the names, and the M in others, may be the Hebrew prepositions; and thus De-l-ta, is D for a mark, La-mb-da, is L by a mark. Ga-ni-ta, G by a mark, was afterwards corrupted into Gimel, a camel.

In addition to the letters of the alphabet, we have in these inscriptions several symbols. Seven times we have a cross the symbol of Christianity. Four times we have two short strokes, thus, =, representing the sacred word Jehovah. Twice we have a three-sided character, which in one place, and probably in both, means the nation's oppressors. In two, the writers have put unknown characters for their own names. In one, No. 25, there is a stop at the end.

STYLE OF WRITING.

There are no stops to divide the sentences, nor even spaces between the words. These helps to the reader were not invented till a later age. Nor does a word always end at the end of a line; sometimes one letter of a word will be found in a lower line. We note, however, a slight tendency to the use of final letters, of a shape different from those used in the middle of a word. Thus the כ and ו, when at the end of the word, are sometimes lengthened downwards. We also have a final נ, a wavy line drawn downwards from the foregoing letter. But the same forms for the ו or for the כ are used whether at the end of a word or elsewhere.

Thus more than half of our letters are of the square character as printed, and these may safely be pronounced to be older than the Maccabee coins, as several of our inscriptions declare themselves to be of the time of the Maccabee rebellion, and older. These inscriptions have thus an important bearing on the question of the characters in which the Hebrew Scriptures were written in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. We must wait for the discovery of earlier inscriptions before we can learn what characters were used by Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel.

PENMANSHIP.

Every work of man's hand may be made with more or with less attention to neatness and elegance; and the style and taste thus shown is of no little help in fixing the relative age of such works. The few inscriptions which we have here offer but a small field for such a study; but even here we can divide the writings into three groups—the rude, the plain, and the ornamental. We will begin with the last, as being most easily pointed out.

In No. 16b, and 59a, we have the four letters of the word ונְבָשָׂר united into one character. The ו is strictly rectangular; and though the last letter in the word, it is drawn downwards and backwards so that the reader comes upon it first. The נ is simply a loop which joins the other two letters. The whole clearly shows an aim at elegance.

In No. 85, and No. 82, we have the same loop for נ at the bottom of the letter נ. As No. 85 is of Christian times, we gain a date for this aim at regularity and ornamental writing. No. 27 has the letters נ and נ both made very neatly, and it is of the same late date. No. 75 is another example of careful writing, indeed of doubly careful writing, for while the lines, as usual, are horizontal, the letters are so placed that the Gnostic word הִ-הִ-הִ-הִ can be read downwards. No. 11 has a rectangular character drawn backwards, which I read as an unformed ו. No. 15 has the ו large, and strictly rectangular.

In the book trade of Alexandria, as we learn from Eusebius (Eccl. Hist. vi. 23), two kinds of writers were employed. When an author was not skilled in the use of the pen he employed a Quick-writer to write down his words; but when his book was to be published it was handed over to a Book-writer, who wrote it out neatly, and with regularity, as we see in the Greek MSS. of the fourth and fifth centuries. The inscriptions quoted above show us how the book-writers of Hebrew in Alexandria at that time formed their letters, and indeed how they ornamented the MSS. In the Greek MS. of the Bible, known as the Alexandrian MS. in the British Museum, the capital letter which marks the beginning of a sentence is not always the first letter in the word. So here, when the word וְבָשָׂר begins the sentence, the ו, not the ב, is the capital letter.

No. 65 is of a very fanciful character. The first line begins with the word וְבָשָׂר, of which the ו, the capital, is drawn down so as to be read a second time as the first letter in the word בְּפָ, with which the second line begins. The inscription ends in the same way. The last letter of the word מִלְחָמָה, in the first line, is also the last letter of the word מִלְחָמָה in the second line. No. 138 has the same fanciful arrangement. The same two words in the first line each lend the last letter to help the second line. The only difference is, that here the last letter in the first line falls down into the middle of the second line. In No. 13, the second line has a capital letter of its own, and that not the first letter. It is ו in the word בְּפָ, and it is joined to the first word in the first line. The sandstone rock in the valley of Mocatteb is not the material on which fanciful and ornamental peculiarities of penmanship would be first tried; and we may be sure that all that we have been describing was borrowed from the book-writers of Alexandria. In particular, the flourish of the letters in No. 138 must have been copied from a MS.

The custom of writing horizontally what was to be also read vertically, as described above in No. 75, is still to be seen in some copies of the Hebrew Scriptures. In them the words are so carefully arranged, that by reading vertically you can read the name of the scribe and the date of his writing.

These Sinaitic inscriptions teach us that the Jews in Egypt rightly understood the commandment in Exod. xx. 4, 5, and did not take it as forbidding representations of men and animals, when not meant to be worshipped. There are many figures on these rocks. No. 85 says, "Thus tread down lying Christianity;" and it is surrounded by a number of figures, which Mr. Grey does not describe, which probably by their action explain the word "Thua." No. 82, in the same way, begins with the word "Thus," and is accompanied by a crowd of men and animals, which are to be "gathered in," as the inscription prays. No. 144 is in behalf of the pilgrim's "strong camel," and beside it is a figure of the animal with his burden on his back. No. 167 is on behalf of "the camel's foal," and the figure of the animal is introduced into the middle of the sentence.

The aim after the ornamental is sometimes carried to an excess, and of this we have an example in No. 55a. Here we have a complex character of which the upper portion is the word רַיִ, and the ר is lengthened downwards so as to join the middle letter in the word רַיְ, while the head of the letter י seems to form the ר with which the word רַבָּתִ may end. In No. 86b the last letter in the word רַיְ is made to serve as the head to an animal there drawn. In No. 117 the first word has the middle letter made rather tall, and its top ornamented with a cross, the mark of the writer's being a Christian.

In No. 154 we have an example of the writing being the worse for the writer's aim at regularity. The line on which the letters stand bides the bottom of each, and makes some of them doubtful.

This line has made it necessary to reject several of these inscriptions, as not to be read with any certainty.

Of the work of the quick-writer No. 152 is a good example. The letters flow in wavy curves, and are yet kept distinct. In some of Mr. Grey's inscriptions the letters are so much run together that I have not been able to disentangle them. In others it is not so difficult. Thus, in No. 2c, the word כֹּלְוָה is a single character; כֹּבֶשׂ is a second, and מֵיִ is a third. In No. 22 רַיִ and אֲרַ are each a single character. In No. 27c רַיְ is a single character, the same as that which is the lower half of the yet more complex character in No. 55a. In No. 26 the letters, though separate, have a marked slope. It is unnecessary to give more examples.

Of plain simple writing the inscriptions on the stone No. 91 are a good example. The letters are sufficiently clear and well made, with no pretence at ornament. This is most certainly of the time of the Maccabee revolt. No. 29 and No. 30, which I place a few years later, in the time of John Hyrcanus, are equally simple and clear.

Of the older handwriting, if we may judge from the form of the letters, No. 31 and No. 41 are good examples.

As writing became more common, and the art of penmanship more studied, the form of each letter was naturally changed slightly and imperceptibly, by what was at the time thought no change, but only an improvement. In this way, after a time, great changes have been brought about; and though our Sinaitic inscriptions certainly look very unlike the Hebrew of the MSS. which we have adopted for printed books, yet they show our present Hebrew letters in their earlier forms. These inscriptions perhaps range over ten centuries; but there is then an interval of five centuries more before we come to the MSS.

We have no Hebrew MSS. of the Bible older than A.D. 900. Hence we do not know when the irregular letters were reduced to their present uniformity and regularity. But the art of penmanship was much studied in Alexandria in the fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries; and the Jews of that city are likely to have followed the Greek scribes in their endeavour to make their writing regular.

It is much to be wished that they had not so often sacrificed distinctness to the aim at regularity. If they left to us the sloping י of these inscriptions, it would not have become so like the ט, and so often mistaken for it. If they had left the ז lying down, it would not have become so like the י and the ז. If they had kept the מ and the נ of these inscriptions, they would neither have been so like the נ. In the same way the ב would have been less like the ב, and the ב more distinct from the ב.

With a view to distinctness and the reader's convenience, I have had the article and the prepositions in these pages printed as separate words, and not as prefixes.

It is unnecessary to remark that writings which may at first have been badly chiselled into the rock, and then after two thousand years badly copied, may now be wrongly transcribed into Hebrew letters and wrongly translated into English.

A simple stroke has sometimes to be taken at pleasure for either the י, the י, the ט, or the ז. If it has a fork at the top, it may be either the י, the ט, or the ז. If it is curved, it may be either ז or ט. If it is curved and joined to the back of another letter, it may be ט or ז. In the latest inscriptions there is no difference between י and ט.

We often find the י broken into two characters, which are very distinctly to be read as one. That this is done by no fault of Mr. Grey's is very clearly shown in No. 129. The lines are never broken into words, and they thus have to be divided at pleasure. But notwithstanding these sources of error, it will be found that in every case the doubt is confined within very narrow limits. Here and there a wrong word may be produced; but it may be safely said that in no case is there any doubt about the general meaning of an inscription.

Egyptian hieroglyphics were seldom correctly copied before we had gained the power of reading them; and now it is to be hoped that future travellers will both add to the number of these inscriptions, and remove some of the doubts about those which we already have. But whenever they do so, I venture to foretell that they will bring home a strong testimony to the accuracy and care with which Mr. Grey made his copies; and my wish is that, while making his inscriptions useful towards a knowledge of the Hebrew nation and its literature, I may gain for Mr. Grey the credit that he deserves, and that this volume may be, to use the words of the writer of No. 145, "a memorial to be tied about the neck," זכרון ענדיה ל נך.

After these remarks I proceed to transcribe and to translate such of the inscriptions as can be read most safely, and to add a few words on the peculiarities of each. I am obliged to omit those that are cut upon a strong line, as such a line robes many letters of their distinctness. This the writer may have drawn upon the rock with a view to make his letters range in due order; but the workman with his iron pen and leaden hammer should by no means have chiselled it into the rock. They are here left in the order in which Mr. Grey published them. He probably placed those first which he thought that he had copied most correctly. I have also used Mr. Grey's numbers, adding the letters (a), (b), and (c), when there are several inscriptions on the same piece of rock; and adding the letter P for his word "perfect," and F for his word "fragment."

HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS

FROM THE

VALLEYS BETWEEN EGYPT AND MOUNT SINAI,

TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED.

No. 1.

ל דכְרֹנוּ עֲבָנֵךְ דְכְרֹנוּ רַע וָרָע :
דְקָנוּ נִיר דְקָא עַם רָק יְהוָה :
רוּחַ הָרָק שְׁלָמָן :
רַע :

*For a memorial for Abeg, a memorial for his foreign companion.
Keep alive the broken lamp of the people who are rejected, O
Jehovah. Refresh the smitten, heal the hurt.*

In the first line, the letters בְּבָנָה are joined into one character, בָּבָן, and the רָעָה, and the וָרָעָה. The ר at the end of the line is a wavy stroke drawn downwards, as in No. 22, and often elsewhere. In the second line, the רָקָה are joined, and the three letters שְׁלָמָן in the third line. A simple stroke stands for וָיְהָיָה, וְיְהָיָה, and וְיְהָיָה alike.

The word דְכְרֹנוּ is Chaldee for כְּכָרְנוּ. The name בָּבָן is not known. It may perhaps be the same as אֲבָנָה, which we have in אֲבָנָתָא and בְּבָנָתָא of Esther i. 10, the names of two Persian noblemen in the court of Xerxes I. At any time after the reign of Cyrus, a Jew may have taken a Persian name.

The foreign companion was probably Abeg's concubine, to whom custom did not give the title of wife, as marriage with a foreigner was forbidden by the law of Deut. vii. 3, a law which had been enforced by Ezra and Nehemiah. It is true that the words here have not a feminine termination. But in these inscriptions unnecessary letters are usually dropped. In Proverbs v., love for הָרָה, a foreign woman, is blamed. In Jerem. iii. 20, and Hos. iii. 1, the man living with a concubine is called יְרָה, a friend, or companion; here the woman is so called.

For the word, יְגַן, a lamp, see 1 Kings xi. 36, where Jehovah promises to Solomon that there shall always be a lamp for David in Jerusalem. Hence "a broken lamp" is a natural figure for a ruined kingdom. The word אִקְרָה, broken, has the Chaldee final letter, which is common in these inscriptions. The יְגַן is not Hebrew. If it is the Chaldee for the Hebrew יְגַן, to grow old, it may mean allow to grow old. I render it, by conjecture, "keep alive." The second line ends with the letter נ between two plain strokes. This word is better written in No. 2c and No. 10. It is met with so often in these inscriptions that there can be no doubt about its meaning. I render it Jehovahsh, and write it יְהֹוָשׁ. This agrees with the Greek historians, who tell us that the sacred name was pronounced IAΩ.

In the third line, יְגַן is for הַכְּתָה, smitten, the participle of נִכְתָּה. It refers to Jerusalem, which Ezekiel, in xxxiii. 21, describes as הַכְּתָה, when destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.

This inscription is of some century after the return from captivity. It may very possibly be earlier than the Maccabee revolt.

No. 2a.

שְׁלָמָם קְרַצְמָן
: יְהֹוָשׁ יְהֹוָשׁ

A peace-offering for the broken pieces of the rejected people, O Jehovah.

In a rude inscription we do not look for the full plural termination of קְרַצְמָן; the feeble letters are here often dropt. The last word is written, not with נ of the Syriac form, as in No. 1, but with ר. I suppose that the writer meant this for the Hebrew נ, but left his letter unfinished on purpose, under the same feelings as led the Jews, at a late time, not to utter the sacred name, nor to write it in Greek letters. But the word, both in this form and as in No. 1, is met with here too often to leave us in any doubt about its meaning.

No. 2b.

שְׁלָמָם הַעֲנָה
: יְהֹוָשׁ יְהֹוָשׁ *

*A peace-offering for her that is afflicted. Strangle , O Jehovah.

In העֲנָה we have the Hebrew עֲנָה, afflicted, made feminine by adding the Chaldee termination to it. Jerusalem is often spoken of in the prophets as an afflicted woman, as in Isaiah li. 21, and liv. 11.

I do not know which of the nation's enemies is meant by the unknown character in the last line; possibly the Greco-Syrians under Antiochus Epiphanes, not the Romans under Vespasian, whom they did not hope to conquer. It was common with the Jews in their oppressed state to speak of the oppressors thus guardedly.

No. 2c.

שְׁלָמָם לְסֵדֶן
: יְהֹוָשׁ יְהֹוָשׁ

A peace-offering for the crushed people. Make happy her that is sighing, O Jehovah.

The word סֵדֶן is for the Hebrew סִדְנֵי, or סִדְנָאֵל. In No. 6 it is spelt סֵדֶן. In the Bible it usually means a foreign people, but in Isaiah li. 4 it is the people of Israel. The word סֵדֶן has the Chaldee termination. It may either be a part of יְסַדֵּן, to crush, or of יְסַדֵּן, to accept. We shall meet with it in both senses. Here I prefer the first, as the division of the inscription into two lines may show where the sentences are divided.

The verb סַדֵּן, to make happy, has been chosen for alliteration with the word which follows. Its three letters are united into one.

No. 3.

זכר יר רהך :
חן צק :
שלם דק רש ירו :

A memorial for the city that hath been emptied. Pity the oppressed. A peace-offering for the crushed and poor one, O Jehovah. Or perhaps, A small poor peace-offering, O Jehovah.

This is not wholly satisfactory.

The first word is Hebrew, not Chaldee, as in the foregoing. The word ר is doubtful, both in its reading and in its meaning. It may be נְרָא for נִיר, a lamp; but I prefer to consider it as the same as עִיר, a city. Again, שׁ is doubtful, and דְקָה badly written. The verb רַוֵּק, to empty, would naturally drop the feeble letter, and be written רַוֵּק; but here we have an unnecessary ה between the two consonants. This is frequent in these inscriptions. It seems to have been used to soften the roughness of the Hebrew language.

No. 4.

דרכן ה צח עיר
צד רע : רח יר השר
דק ירו :

A memorial. The lamentation for the city, which has been laid waste, in misery. Refresh the city which hath been left, rejected, O Jehovah.

The word מְרַעַי is for מְרֹעַי, a cry or lament; חֲזַב is for חַזֵּב, to make to breathe; שְׁמַר is the Hiphil of שָׁמַר, to remain. As in every case all unnecessary letters are dropped, so the word רַעַי of the first line is shortened into רַע in the second. (See No. 3.)

The "remainder of the city" might belong to the destruction by Nebuehadnezzar or that by the Romans; and as two out of the four inscriptions which use those words, are of Christian times, we may rather suppose that this also is of the later date.

No. 6.

שלום לום הרש ערד עיר דק :
לילי :

A peace-offering for the nation which is made poor, made bare, the crushed city. By night.

Here the usual word סְלָמָה is spelt סְלָם, as in No. 55a and No. 59a. הרש may be the Hiphil of רִוֵּשׁ, to be poor. The double ר in ערד is a doubly long wavy line. (See No. 22.)

We may suppose that the writer cut this inscription after dark, when the air was cool.

No. 10.

שלום ה קצא : שם נח יהו :

A peace-offering for her that is cut short; give rest, O Jehovah.

In 2 Kings x. 32 we have the same expression used. When the northern kingdom of Israel was lessened by the armies of Syria, "Jehovah began to cut Israel short." The word נְקַצָּה has the Chaldee feminine termination.

The word נְקַצָּה is for the Hebrew נְקַצָּה. It is usually a verb, to give rest, and so used in No. 4 and No. 178; but it is used as a noun in Esther ix. 16, and 2 Chron. vi. 41.

No. 11.

שלום
ענו ה חמץ
ה נקא קזרן :

A peace-offering for the afflicted, who is made to wander about, who is guiltless, cut short.

We have the word נְקַרְתָּה in No. 74; and judging from the way in which the נ in No. 16b, though the last letter in the word, is drawn back to be the first, I venture to read this imperfect character here as a נ.

In Jerem. xxxi. 22, the Jews and Israelites who did not return home when Cyrus gave them leave to do so, are said to be "wandering about," and this word is there used.

The cross at the head of this inscription may be the Egyptian character for "life," but it was more probably meant for the symbol of Christianity. The writer would not have used a pagan symbol. He was a Christian Jew.

He does not contradict the Jewish opinion, that the nation's misfortunes were a punishment for guilt; he probably means that the nation was "guiltless" towards its Roman masters. This may have been written in the second century, when the cross had already become a symbol of Christianity, and while there were yet Jews professing that religion.

No. 13.

שלום שער דקק הלה
קם רוח בְּלִיּוּ יְהוָה

A peace-offering for her that is made bare, broken to pieces, cast off. Raise up the broken lest she die, O Jehovah.

Or the first line might read as דַקְקָה, as if "the assembly" were naked, broken to pieces. But the above is to be preferred. In Micah iv. 7 we have the verb אָלַח, to cast off, to remove far off; our word may be the adverb בְּלִי, beyond. In רֹחֶךָ the middle letter is not wanted. The Hebrew word is רֹקֶךָ, רֹיקֶךָ, or רֹיךֶךָ; but here the cases are frequent in which the letter ה is inserted. The word יְהוּ is remarkable; for in these inscriptions the feeble letters are usually dropped. If we divide the words differently, and read יְהוּ בְּלִי, we equally have to note the unusual presence of the feeble letter. The ו in the second line is, for ornamental reasons, joined to the ו in the line above. This may be compared to the ornamental ו in No. 16b.

The artistic taste shown on any ancient monument is often good evidence of its date; and the neat shape of the letter ו gives to this inscription a late date, at least not before the rise of Christianity.

No. 14.

שלום : ע קם עקר רְקִיעָה

A peace-offering. Strengthen, raise up her that is bound, rejected, O Jehovah.

The second word עֲקָעָה may be taken as the imperative of עֲקֹעַ, to strengthen. The word רְקִיעָה is Chaldee; it is also used in Gen. xxii. 9.

No. 15.

שלום ח קץ
שלום ק רץ

A peace-offering for her that is cut short; a peace-offering for her that has been torn to pieces.

We have the first prayer in No. 10, and the last word in No. 99a. In the first line the writer seems to have omitted the letter ב in the first word by mistake, and then to have added the second line to correct the first, unless, perhaps, the side of the ו lengthened upwards may be the ב. In No. 16c a mistake has been corrected in the same way. In both lines the ץ is unformed, and looks like the two letters pw. But the meaning of the whole justifies our reading. This fault of breaking the ץ into two characters is very common. The ר in רְקִיעָה hangs down below the foregoing letter.

No. 16a.

שלום ח קץ

A peace-offering for her that has been cut short.

This is the same as in No. 15, but in neither of them have we the Chaldee feminine termination which we have in No. 10.

No. 16b.

*כְּרָן קַדֵּשׁ
: צָעַק רְקָא
: שְׁלָהָם

A memorial for her that is awakened. She that is broken in pieces crieth aloud. A peace-offering.

The first letter in דְּרָן, a memorial, is wanting; the stone had been broken. From the same cause the first letter in the second line is doubtful. The word צָעַק may be from צָעַק, cut short; or it may mean awakened, as in No. 91. I prefer the latter because of the next clause.

The ס in the third line is enlarged ornamentally, and drawn backwards, as in No. 59; the ו is a loop between the last two letters.

The word נִקְרָא, broken in pieces, may point to Daniel vii. 7, where the fourth beast, the Greco-Syrian monarchy, is said to devour and break in pieces its oppressed subjects. We shall see that the writer of No. 27a had also been reading the Book of Daniel.

Like No. 91, this would seem to belong to a time when the nation had been roused to resist its Greco-Syrian oppressors.

No. 16c.

דְּרָן רְךָ רְחָ רְקָ נִרְמָם רְקָ :
רְךָ יְרָ
: יְהָרָ

A memorial for her that is trampled on, ground down, cast out, destroyed, broken to pieces. The city hath passed away.

There is not much that is doubtful in this remarkable inscription, except in the second clause, which, however, is very clearly written. The writer's evident love of alliteration helps us, though it may have cramped him. The first two letters in דְּרָן are joined, or rather transposed. The ר in רְךָ, and the same in נִרְמָם are badly formed.

From מִמְמָה, a hand-mill, Gesenius gets רְחָה, to grind, which may give us our word מִמְמָה, ground down. Or we may read it as the verb Refresh, at the beginning of a new sentence, Refresh her that is cast out. In נִרְמָם we have the Niphal of the verb דְמָה, to destroy. This is an unusual case of an inscription keeping the feeble inflection.

In No. 8, and several times elsewhere, I have taken יְרָ to mean יְרָי, the city. The writer here, being dissatisfied with that way of spelling the word, has written it a second time as רְךָ. This goes far to confirm our conjecture, as neither way of spelling the word is quite right. In Hosea xiii. 3, and Eccl. i. 4, the verb חָלָק is used absolutely, as here, for passing away, ceasing to be.

Our inscription would suit either the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, or when the city was more completely destroyed by the Romans.

No. 17a.

שְׁלָמָם קַדְצָא חַנְבָּה :

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, favour the despised one.

The letter ש is here broken into two pieces. This is often the case, and shows that it is not the fault of the copy.

No. 17b.

שְׁלָמָם עַי : זְעַק יְיָ : רֹן הַקְּזָב :

A peace-offering for the ruined heap. Jerusalem calls aloud. Make her that is cut short to rejoice.

Here the second word is doubtful, because its last letter is joined to the following word. But our reading is supported by No. 18.

The two strokes, which I write as " , and read as meaning

Jerusalem, occur too often in these inscriptions to leave us in doubt about the meaning. It was only natural for the pilgrims to save the trouble of cutting so long a word on stone, and one which is used by so many. If our word יְרֵא is allowed to mean city, then " may be the two first letters of שָׁלֹם יְרֵא, the city of Jerusalem. But the meaning of the two strokes is more certain than this explanation.

No. 18.

שָׁלֹם עַי דְּרֵא : שָׁעַר חַנְקָה קָצָב

A peace-offering for the sick ruin; give help; make her that is cut short to rejoice.

The last letter in the line is doubtful. The ר in קָצָב is drawn downwards, as a waving stroke at the bottom of the foregoing letter, as in No. 1, No. 43, No. 142a, and twice in No. 22. Such flourishes in the letters show that they were drawn upon the stone first with a brush rapidly, and afterwards cut laboriously with an iron style and a mallet. For the word יְזִיר, see No. 27c.

This inscription and the last suit very well with the time of the Maccabee revolt, a time of hope, but when the city had been reduced to a heap of ruins.

No. 19.

שָׁלֹם אֲשֶׁר :

This is followed by a Christian cross.

A peace-offering for one purified by fire; or of the fire of purification.

There is here no word of enmity to Christianity, as in No. 85; and it may have been written by a Christian Jew in the second century, as were probably No. 11, and No. 111, and others.

No. 21.

שָׁלֹם חַפְרָק :

A peace-offering for her that has broken free.

This may be safely read by the help of No. 24, where the first two letters are better formed. The ח is upside down. The פ is the same as כ in No. 17; and so throughout these inscriptions. There is only one character for the two letters.

The verb פְּרַק, to break in pieces, is in later times used for breaking the yoke or making free. The change may be explained by Gen. xxvii. 40, פְּרַקְתָּךְ, thou shalt break his yoke. The later meaning is seen in Lam. v. 8, which may be of the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, "there is none that doth deliver us;" and in Psalm xxxvi. 24, "he hath rescued us from our oppressors." This Psalm may have been written when the nation had gained its independence under the Maccabees; and to that time I should give this inscription, and No. 24.

No. 22.

שָׁלֹם : חַנְקָה עַי עַה
כְּן עַר אַר עַל עַק
לְהֻוּ
סָמֵךְ :

A peace-offering. Favour the crushed ruined heap of ruins. Establish the city that was cursed, unjustly treated, pressed down. The horses are weary.

The ס is divided, and might be read as ps; but this would not help the difficulty. We have a p unexplained. The word פְּרַעַת is not Hebrew, but we must understand it as the softened form of פְּרַעַץ. We have the same in No. 130; and in No. 121 we have פְּרַעַץ softened into psps.

The second line ends with a doubtful word.

In No. 55a, פְּרַעַת is a substantive, the same as פְּרַעַץ. In Ezek. xxi. 27, פְּרַעַת is a substantive; but in Isaiah xxiv. 1, it is a verb. Here I take it as a participle. I take נָרַא as the same as אָרַר, cursed, and נָבַי, as נְבַי, perhaps unjustly treated.

In the third and fourth lines we have two forms of the letter י which circumstance throws a doubt on the first of them. The word סְוָס, as a collective noun, may have a plural verb.

The writer may have had several beasts with him, to carry himself, his tent, and perhaps his servants. He probably means that the horse was tired of standing in an inconvenient place, while the writer, sitting on his back, was chiselling his inscription on a lofty piece of rock.

The word "establish" would seem to say that no struggle for freedom was now being made. This seems to belong to the time when the Maccabees had gained independence.

No. 23.

וְכָרְן זֶה נָק
" עַם רִקָּא קָש "

This is a memorial for guiltless Jerusalem, the people cast out like stubble or chaff.

The last two letters in the well-known first word are united. It is rare to meet with a pronoun as we do here. As in No. 11, the nation is called guiltless. In Nos. 13 and 14 I have rendered נָק as crushed and rejected. In Jerem. xiii. 24, the people are to be scattered as "chaff before the wind." The same word is here used.

No. 24.

שְׁלָמָם פְּרָאֵק
אָרְךָ דָק יְרוֹא

A peace-offering for her that has broken free; lengthen the small, O Jehovah.

The first word in the second line is doubtful; but it is more clear in Dr. Lepsius's copy. We have the word in No. 25, and No. 26.

See No. 21 for the word פְּרָאֵק. This inscription and that may be of the time of the successful revolt of the Maccabees, which began B.C. 166.

No. 25.

אָרְךָ קָחֵז רֹשֶׁת שְׂרָה אֲרָר :
רֹדֵץ לְהַהְהָה רַע וְכָרְחָמָר
רִם הַ חֹזֶן עֲנָה הַ רְעוּה : =

Lengthen the wretched piece cut off of the congregation that is cursed. Show favour to the he-he-he-he, injured, remembered, desired. Raise up the outside; answer the Knowledge, O Jehovah.

We might render the last clause Knowledge or Gnosticism is afflicted, but the parallelism with the foregoing clause rather justifies the above. It probably means "Give answer to the enigmatical Gnostic prayer."

The last word in the first line has an נ of the form of the printed letter; it ends, however, with a wavy נ drawn downwards, as in No. 22. The second line begins with ר, of the printed form. The word נָכָר also has the same ר, although in the other inscriptions that letter is not so formed. The ש is of a Greek form.

The sign for Jehovah is followed by a bar for a stop, as also, perhaps, is the word חָמָר. These perhaps are the only places where a stop is used.

The congregation is the nation, or perhaps the governing body in Jerusalem, of which only a wretched portion now remains. In Esther x. 3, the preposition ב follows the verb רָצַח, as here, but with a different force. Of the five letters which follow, the first is of a rather different form from the others; hence I take it for the article, and leave the other four to form a Gnostic enigmatic word, he-he-he-he. The word גַּת, the outside, may mean the wanderers at a distance. The last word, Knowledge, again tells us that this is by a Gnostic Jew, who is proud of his γνῶσις, knowledge, or science, which the Apostle Paul speaks contemptuously of, in

I Tim. vi. 20—"the antitheses or oppositions of science, falsely so called."

The "Pistis-sophia," a Gnostic treatise of the third or fourth century, written by an Egyptian Christian, tells us that the name of God was written aaa ωωω, the name of Jesus iii. This seems to be explained as φφφ, perhaps for Filius. The Holy Ghost was ψψψ, perhaps for πνευμα. The Trinity was aaaa, aaaa, aaaa. From such whimsical reasoning as this, I venture to conjecture that our four letters חָרְחָה mean הַכִּל, the temple of Jerusalem, which may well be called "injured, remembered, desired;" as the inscription was written after the destruction of the city by Titus in A.D. 71.

This would seem to be among the most modern of our inscriptions. It has both the ח and the ר of the form used in the MSS., and it throws important light on the progress of the writing towards our present letters.

No. 26.

אָרֵךְ חָנְצָא

Lengthen, show favour, accept.

The first word here is the same as in No. 25; but its last letter here has the final form ג, which is not usual.

No. 27a.

עַל עַלְעַל : חָנְ רְהַקְחָא עַי אָרְ
עַדְהָ לְיִאָחָרָה

For the rib. Favour the anointing oil of the ruin that has been cursed. For the congregation a white [garment, of holiness].

The letters here are peculiar, but mostly very distinct. In the first line בּ is one character. The נ and the ר are ornamenteally made. In the second line there is an unfortunate flaw, and the י is doubtful. The y at the beginning of the second line may be for the preposition בּ, as elsewhere.

If our pilgrim had been reading Daniel vii. 5, he may perhaps have considered the unfortunate Judea as one of the three ribs which the bear had devoured. The holy anointing oil of Exodus xxx. 25, literally the "compound compounded after the art of the apothecary," which might not be used except for anointing the priests, may here be taken to mean the priesthood. The flaw in the second line we may fill up by conjecture, and I read לְבוֹשָׂתָא a garment, giving to the word its Chaldee form. We may support this conjecture by supposing that our pilgrim had been further reading Daniel vii. 9, where a "white garment" is mentioned as worn by the Ancient of days.

No. 27b.

שְׁלָמָה לְחַצְׁבָּן

A peace-offering for her that is weary, cut short.

The word לְחַצְׁבָּן may be for לְחַצְׁבָּן. The letters are remarkably well made. Or we may read לְחַלְבָּן as one word, cast off, as in No. 13.

No. 27c.

שְׁלָמָה קְזִין דָר
עַעֲהָא : עַיר יְרָא

A peace-offering for her that is shortened in her generation, the ruined heap of ruins. Help the city.

See No. 22 for the words "ruined heap of ruins;" and see also No. 18, where we have "a sick ruin."

The three letters שְׁעַר, of exactly the same form, end the first line in No. 1, but we divide them there into two words. For ר, see No. 16c, &c.

No. 28.

וְכַרְנוּ קְרַבָּא
שְׁלָמָה דָלָק

A memorial for her that is cut short. Heal the persecution, O Jehovah.

The words at the beginning of each line are joined ornamenteally.

I understand סָשׁ as a mistake for סָלֶשׁ, unless perhaps the נַ is to be borrowed from the group of letters above. The נַ in דָלֵק is of a Greek form, as in No. 13 and No. 25. The two strokes = I take to mean Jehovah, as in No. 25. They end the inscription, and must be distinguished from the נַ, which mean Jerusalem.

The verb דָלֵק, to burn, and pursue hotly, in Pa. vii. 13, and x. 2, means to persecute. The latter is a late Psalm, as is probably the former.

No. 29.

שְׁלָמָם כָּבֵר נִזְעָא : רַץ
עַרְיָה רַדְדֵי יְהֹוָה

A peace-offering for the bold Confederation; accept my city that hath been trampled on, O Jehovah.

In the first line we may read נִזְעָא, bold, like נִזְעָן of Isaiah xxxiii. 19, from נִזְעָן, to be strong.

I understand כָּבֵר to be the same as חֲבֵר, a confederation, or republic, the word used by John Hyrcanus on his coins. He governed Judea as an independent sovereign from B.C. 135 to B.C. 106, as chief priest for the Confederation of the Jews. See Madden's "Jewish Coinage." Our inscription may be of that time.

No. 30.

שְׁלָמָם כָּבֵר יְ

A peace-offering for the Confederation of Jerusalem.

This is a fragment; the final stroke may perhaps be meant for a stop. We have a stop at the end of No. 25.

This confirms our word Confederation in No. 29, because its simplicity forbids our giving to כָּבֵר its other meaning of already, now at length.

Our two inscriptions must be of about B.C. 130.

No. 31.

שְׁלָמָם הַ מֶלֶךְ נְכָר : כָּו עַ :

*A peace-offering for her that is nipped off, made strange.
Establish the counsel.*

The נַ at the end of the first line hangs down below the foregoing letter.

The word מֶלֶךְ is known only in Leviticus i. 15, and v. 8. for nipping off the head of a bird, and may well be used figuratively for the fallen nation. We have the "counsel" spoken of in No. 48b. This I venture to consider as one of the oldest in the collection. The letters מַ, נַ, and פַ are peculiar. It may have been written when Judea was under the mild government of the Persians, perhaps about the time of Nehemiah. The complaint is but slight that the city or country has been "made strange." Jeremiah, in xix. 4, makes the same complaint against foreign customs. The prayer "Establish the counsel" is explained in No. 48b, as being the counsel or proposal to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem, unless we take it as the timber which Nehemiah had from the king's forest for the purpose. See Nehem. ii. 8. The word bears either meaning. The inscription shows satisfaction with the state of affairs at home.

No. 32.

שְׁלָמָם מִן רַזְעָן עַ רְקָמָן :

A peace-offering, a lean portion, for the crushed city.

The word מִן is for מִן; מִנְהָה is allied to רַזְעָן, leanness. I take עַ for city, as in No. 133 and elsewhere; and עַ for the preposition by, as in No. 76 and elsewhere.

The writer, remembering the more literal meaning of the word "peace-offering," that of an animal or portion of food for the priest, calls his inscription "the lean portion of a peace-offering." In Levit. vii. 33, this word מִנְהָה, a portion, is used for the priest's share of the animal brought to the altar.

No. 34.

שלום רודר קע שמו :

A peace-offering for her that is trampled on. Inscribe His name.

For רודר, ss in No. 29, we here have רודר, which I consider a mistake. The known word γραψη, a mark (see No. 91a), is supposed to come from γράπειν, to make a mark. Here we have it in the imperative mood.

No. 36a.

שלום כטו : דרכ ה רישע לב :

A peace-offering for His throne. Shoot at the wicked of heart.

The complex character which I venture to unravel and read as בְּנֵי, need not be considered doubtful. In Exod. xvii. 16, the nation is called "the hand upon the throne of Jah"; and thus Jerusalem may be styled Jehovah's throne, and be here meant. To understand רָקַח as meant for רָקַח, to shoot, is allowable. The נ is of the Greek form, and the inscription one of the more modern.

No. 36b.

שלום : רן בחרן לך :

A peace-offering. Make the watch-tower which has been smitten to rejoice.

This is not satisfactory. The letter פ had been badly cut, and it joins the upper line. Hence, I conjecture that the two last letters have been cut again, and very clearly. We may take רָקַח for the Chaldee רָקַח, bruised, or from the Hebrew רָקַב, to be licked up, as blood.

No. 37.

שלום עי קיר נק : של
ה י"ל : ח לים :

A peace-offering for the utter ruins of the guiltless city; prosper the injured Jerusalem; make the people to rejoice.

The last word in the first line is finished in the second line.

The three letters between the נ and the ס in the second line are each a simple stroke; yet the words are scarcely doubtful.

No. 38.

עם דב קשא דש רץ שדו
הַקְיָרוֹ:

The people is sacrificed, ensnared, trodden down, crushed, blighted, O Jehovah.

The word שׁוֹרֶהָק is divided between the two lines. I take it for שׁוֹרֶהָק, blighted, on the supposition that its last letter has been made to face the wrong way, and is to be read as נ.

No. 40.

שׁוֹחֵד
שְׁקִי קָרְדּוֹ:

Change the girding of sackcloth for Jerusalem, the rejected city.

The second letter in פָּרָה is doubtful, but the word may be read by the help of No. 157, where it is clearly written. The verb שׁוֹחֵד in Chaldee is to surround. We have nearly the same words also in No. 49. For קָרְדּוֹ we have קָרְדּוֹ, as in No. 56.

No. 41.

שלום ה למ פרא
מ עם רע :
שׁע רק יהו :

A peace-offering for the nation which has broken free from a wicked people. Help the rejected, O Jehovah.

See No. 21 and 24 for the word פָּרָה. In Lam. v. 8, it is followed by the preposition נ, as here. This is badly written, or rather of an early date; the נ is reversed, but no part is doubtful.

I take יְהֹוָה as the imperative of יְהֹוָה, to save, a verb known to have existed from its remaining forms.

This is probably of the time of the Maccabees. We have the נ of the early form, as in No. 31. The letters פְרַת are united, as in No. 44.

No. 43.

שְׁלָמָן
עֲרָסֵה נָאָר
: דָקְפָת

A peace-offering for the bed devoted to destruction, the scanty allotment.

The נ at the end of the second line is a wavy line drawn downwards. The Hebrew שֶׁרֶב, a bed, is in Chaldee עֲרָס.

This figure of speech is used by Isaiah in Ch. xxviii. 20, to describe the nation's crippled state when overrun by the Assyrians:—

“ For the bed is too short for a man to stretch himself, and the covering too narrow to wrap himself.”

In I Kings xxii. 35 פְרַת is the hollow or bosom of the chariot; so here פְרַת may mean the hollow of the bed, while שֶׁרֶב is the frame. But I have left the usual rendering of the word, as above.

No. 44.

שְׁלָמָן קְהֻצָא בְּרַחָא

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, that has been made to flee away.

The first and the second נ are not of the same form. But they are both clear, and thus we see that both forms were in use at the same time.

No. 45.

שְׁלָמָן יְהֹוָה עַק
: עַם רָקְיְהוָה

A peace-offering for the afflicted city Jerusalem, the rejected people, O Jehovah.

As in No. 3, and elsewhere, I take יְהֹוָה as city for יְהֹוָה. The py would, by Amos ii. 13, mean pressed down as by a weight; in Chaldee it is afflicted. See No. 110 for the same word. But see No. 104, where we have the word פִלָ, purified, which may possibly be the true reading here.

The word יְהֹוָה is clearly city here and in No. 76; and whether it be considered an original word, or a corruption of יְהֹוָה, in either case it may furnish an etymology for Jerusalem. We may consider יְהֹוָה as שְׁלָמָן יְהֹוָה, the city of Salem.

No. 46.

שְׁלָמָן חַזְקָעַן הַלְקִידָוָה

A peace-offering; favour the one humbled, pressed down, that was licked up, O Jehovah.

Of the various meanings which can be given to פְרַת, it is best to take the Chaldee פְרַת, humbled, and to consider it a participle, grouped with those which follow it, for alliteration sake. The first letter in py is here plain, and it confirms our reading in No. 45. In I Kings xxi. 19, and xxii. 38, the verb פְרַת is used for dogs licking up the blood of one slain.

No. 47.

שְׁלָמָן עַק דָקְרָחָק

A peace-offering for her that is pressed down, broken, cast out, removed far away.

The middle letter in the last word is of an unusual form; but in Ezek. xi. 15, 16, קָרְחַ is used for removed far away from Jerusalem. This word may possibly here point to the Captivity in Babylon; when, after the Return, a large part of the nation remained scattered. The other words we have in No. 16c or No. 46.

No. 48a.

שָׁלֵם עִם הַ לֹּו עִיר רֶד : חַן רַץ :

A peace-offering for the people which is not, for the city which is trampled on; favour, accept.

The two characters in the second line I understand as an attempt to make the word רַץ more plain.

The word לֹו is for the more usual לֹא, not.

This is on the same piece of rock with the following, and is of the same style as to the form and size of the letters. But being above the following one, it is older than that, and thus older than No. 31, both which we give to the time of Nehemiah. This, therefore, may be of the time of the Captivity, when the Jews were not a people.

No. 48b.

שָׁלֵם הַ עֲצָה אֲשָׁהא יְרוֹ :

A peace-offering for the counsel relating to the wall, O Jehovah.

The letter ע having been badly formed at first, a second letter has been cut over it to remove doubt.

The word יְרוֹ may be either wood or counsel. We have it in No. 31.

The word אֲשָׁהא I take as the Chaldee חָשָׁן, a wall, derived from the Hebrew verb חָשַׁב, to set up, or set fast. It may refer to the wall of Jerusalem, and possibly our inscription may be of the time of Nehemiah, who rebuilt the wall. The use of this particular word, instead of the more usual word חָמָךְ, a wall, may even be explained by the history of the times. When Nehemiah had leave to build the חָמָךְ, or wall, for the protection of the inhabitants against robbery, there was great jealousy against him, as if he were wishing to fortify the city. Hence this more modest word may have been chosen. We have the Hebrew verb שִׁיר used in Isaiah xxvi. 1, written on the return from Captivity, b.c. 537: "Our city is strong, salvation setteth up wells and ramparts"; that is, salvation makes walls unnecessary.

No. 49.

רְכָרָן נְקָה
צָק חָדָר
שְׁקָק עַדְר
דָּק : נִיר הַ נָּה
קָץ יְרוֹ :

A memorial for her that is guiltless, oppressed, girded with sack-cloth, made bare, broken to pieces. Cultivate the pasture which is cut short, O Jehovah.

In No. 11 Jerusalem is called "guiltless." In Ezekiel xi. 14, the sword of Nebuchadnezzar is said to be besetting the nation, where our word חָדָר is used. The word פָּשָׁע must be taken, not as the noun פָּשָׁע, sackcloth, but as a verb, to put in a sack, the root of the noun; and the two verba girded, put in a sack, may be translated girded with sackcloth. See No. 40 and 157, where we have the two words חָדָר and פָּשָׁע. This inscription may refer to the Roman armies encompassing Judea. In the prophets, Judea is often called מִזְרָח, a couching place for flocks, as here; and in Jerem. iv. 3, and Hos. x. 12, the word יְרֻעָה, to cultivate the soil, is used figuratively, as here. Compare the last character in this word with יְרֻעָה in No. 1 and 18, and with יְרֻעָה in No. 22.

No. 51.

שלם : שׁוע ה לם
אול עק : ירו
: שנ

A peace-offering. The failing, crushed people crieth out; O Jehovah, change.

The last word in the first line is very doubtful. It is badly copied. We have nearly the same strokes in No. 58. But here it is best to take them as בָּלֶט. For the other words the same characters are used for י, y, and ئ; and again, in the last two words, ئ, ئ, and ئ are each a plain stroke. Yet I think that there is very little doubt about any word, except בָּלֶט. For פְּשִׁיר, crushed, we might perhaps read פְּשִׁיר, purified as by suffering.

No. 53.

שלם עדך

A peace-offering for thy congregation.

Here the last letter is doubtful.

In No. 25 we have צדקה, congregation, meaning the nation.

No. 54.

שלם עיר הנה
אבה צדק עם : ח
ל ה ראם :

A peace-offering for the city of sighing. The righteous people are willing. Slay the buffalo.

The second letter in the second line I have ventured to think reversed, and I have written not פ, but ב. I took exactly the same liberty in No. 38. The last letter in צדק is badly formed.

The last letter in the second line I take as belonging to a letter at the beginning of the third line.

See the word נַגֵּן, sighing, in No. 2c. "The righteous people are willing," seems to be an answer to Isaiah i. 19, where the same verb is used; "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land." The Buffalo, called in the A. V. the Unicorn, is often used as figurative of Egypt in passages written after the return from captivity. But, in later days, though the Jews blamed the Egyptians for not having helped them against the Babylonians, they felt no hatred against them; and these pilgrims to Sinai were living comfortably on the banks of the Nile. Hence I venture to think that the Greco-Syrians are here meant, perhaps by placing the letters in a wrong order, and writing ראמּ for אֲרָם, Syria. This may have been done to conceal the meaning. See No. 81 for a prayer against אֲרָם, Syria; and see No. 113 for another case of probable concealment of the writer's meaning.

No. 55a.

שלם
עה רקא
לום דלה עיר קוין
עם דק :

A peace-offering for the crushed ruin, the nation cast off, the city cut short, the broken people of Jerusalem.

I suppose that ים, the participle ruined, in No. 22, is here used for the substantive ים, a ruin. The second line ends with a complex character, which I venture to unravel by the help of other inscriptions. Thus No. 138 tells me to complete the word דלה, of which only the first two letters are clear. From No. 27c, and No. 97, I learn that the lower portion of this complex group is the word צפּ; and lastly, the upper portion of the lengthened י stands like ' between ي and ר, thus making the word עיר.

No. 55b.

דְּכָרֵן לְהַנְּעָה רֶקֹעַ
: עַם רֶק :

A memorial therefore for the crushed ruin, the rejected people.

The writer evidently quotes the last inscription which is on the same piece of rock. The Chaldee "therefore" seems to say so. The last word in the first line, for the Chaldee feminine, has not א, but instead of it י. See No. 59b, and No. 60d, for the same peculiarity. The second line explains the first, namely, that the ruin means the people.

No. 56.

שְׁלָמָם הַקְּצָעָה לְקֹעַ : קָרְבָּן לְקֹעַ וְאִירָוָה :

A peace-offering for the piece cut off, of the city which has passed away; this is a town licked up, O Jehovah.

We have here the א, the ר, and the final ג, all of the form of the printed letters; and we may thus suppose that it is one of the more modern inscriptions. I take לְקֹעַ, like לְלָקָח, in No. 91e, to mean gone to nought; and אִירָוָה to be the same as הַזְּבָחָה, for which elsewhere we have the Chaldee תְּזָבֵחַ.

No. 58.

שְׁלָמָם רְדָם הַנְּלָה
: עַיר עַק .

Prosper her that is fast asleep, that is made an end of, the oppressed city.

The first line ends with a compound character formed of נ (see No. 74), and an incomplete נ. The straight stroke I therefore take as נ. The word נְלָה is found with this meaning in Isaiah xxxiii. 1. But see No. 51 for a compound character not unlike this. Hence it is very doubtful.

No. 59a.

שְׁלָמָם : שְׁלָמָם חַר יְהֹוָה דְּקָרְבָּן :

A peace-offering. Prosper, make to rejoice the crushed city, O Jehovah.

The word שְׁלָמָם must be taken as a verb. It is fancifully written. The ה is a loop between the ש and the מ; and the מ is brought down and turned backwards, as is No. 16b. The letter ה distinguishes the verb from the substantive. We must take שְׁלָמָם for the participle שְׁלָמָשׁ, be thou prospering.

No. 59b.

שְׁלָמָם עַק דְּקָרְבָּן :

A peace offering for her that is pressed down, crushed.

The writer seems to have used the letter י for the Chaldee feminine termination. We have the same peculiarity, yet more clearly, in No. 60d, and No. 55b.

No. 60d.

שְׁלָמָם עַק :

A peace-offering for her that is crushed.

See No. 59b, for an explanation of the last letter. These inscriptions tell us that the י and the א were often very much alike in sound.

No. 61.

שְׁלָמָם עַם רְקָא הַעֲנָה יְרוּבָה
עַיר דְּרָהִיחַ נְזָקָה זְרַקָּה :

A peace-offering for the rejected people, that is afflicted, O Jehovah; the city cast out, injured, scattered, despised.

In Jerem. li. 34, we have the word דְּרָהִיחַ, cast out, applied to Jerusslem when conquered by Nebuchadnezzar. Perhaps it might be rendered sponged out, as it is usually applied to washing. Here the word has an unnecessary n. The t in this inscription is of an unusual form, but its force is proved by the two words in which it is found. The word p̄t̄ is Chaldee and late Hebrew. It is met with in Daniel and Esther.

No. 62.

שלום עם רך חדר מך דש ירו :

A peace-offering for the people crushed, rejected, mourning, despised, trodden down, O Jehovah.

The first and the last letters of חֶדְלָה are unusual. In Isaiah liii. 3, this word is applied to Zerubbabel, the servant of Jehovah, who had been rejected of men. The words כַּבֵּשׁ and שִׁבֵּעַ are both badly written; but under each the p and the w are again written more clearly, in order to remove the difficulty. A similar case of double writing is seen in No. 16c. The w here, as in No. 138, approaches our printed letter.

We must suppose that in this case the labourer who with the tent-pin and hammer cut into the rock the letters that had been painted there, cut them badly; and hence they were painted a second time underneath, and then cut again.

No. 63.

שלא מדש ל אָר :

Prosper her that is crushed to the ground.

For מַדְשָׁה we have the less usual word תַּלְשָׁה, but with the final vowel changed, according to Chaldee custom. The word מַדְשָׁה is in Isaiah xxi. 10, as crushed, in the A. V. threshed. The last letter in the word עֲרָם, ground, is omitted. This was not done in carelessness, for in No. 103 we have the word also spelt with only two letters. As in Chaldee, the last letter was so far softened that the word was written עֲרָם, we can understand how it was sometimes omitted altogether.

No. 64.

שלום נק עיר :

A peace-offering for her that hath been vomited out, oppressed.

Lev. xviii. 28, threatens the Israelites with being vomited out by the land, as the nations had before been vomited out. This would less suit a time after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, when the unhappy Jew had no country to pray for.

No. 65.

שלום עיר עק רץ הלהה
מקקה :

A peace-offering for the city pressed down, crushed, cast off, mocked, weary.

This is a fragment with some doubt about the last letters in each line, and it must be read by the help of other inscriptions, particularly No. 138. The מ in the first line is to be read a second time as the first letter in the second line; and the last letter in the second line is perhaps to be read also in the first line. Thus we gain the word תַּלְגָּלָה, which we have in No. 13, though there without the last letter. That the loop at the end of ל is the letter n we learn from No. 139b, and No. 82. We have the word פְּפָרָה in No. 83c.

Our inscription written in this fanciful manner is of a late date, when the Alexandrian penmen were studying ornamental writing.

No. 67.

שלום קחצא
ו נרו קע : חן רץ :

*A peace-offering for her that is cut short, and made lean, alienated.
Show favour, accept.*

The sloping stroke at the beginning of the second line is ו, and; it is our one example of the employment of the copulative. We may take yp as from yp', to be removed, or from yq, alienated.

No. 69.

: מעדר רכא
: זוז צום

Slipping off, being thrown off; the horse is rearing.

The word npw, emptied, may well mean that the saddle is emptied, or rather likely to become so. The word zr, to leap up, we have in Job xli. 22 (14).

The writer was writing on the rock while sitting on his horse, in order to place his inscription at a height; and he found it difficult to do so.

No. 70.

שלום עק זק
רוח אני יהו :

A peace-offering for her that is pressed down, purified. Refresh me, O Jehovah.

The word p may be taken from pqi, to purify. Here n is used for the objective me; in the Bible it is always the nominative. Compare No. 82, where we seem to have pipi.

No. 71a.

* שלם ע דrho
חלל ודר :

*A peace-offering for the heap of ruins, fainting [under] , profaned, trodden down.

The word drho may be for drwa, sick; but there is an unknown character joined to the last letter, which makes the word doubtful. The unknown character may have had a concealed meaning; in No. 2b, the same character means the nation's oppressors.

No. 71b.

" שלם עט עק "

זהא יהו :

A peace-offering for the people pressed down, the sick Jerusalem, O Jehovah.

The Hebrew verb drw, to be sick, will justify our word drha, with its Chaldee feminine termination. Or it may come from nrdh, to cast forth, a word used in Isaiah lxvi. 5.

No. 72.

שלום עט נקא קב רק קצץ :
אנבו רץ :

A peace-offering for the people guiltless, blasphemed, rejected, destroyed. A stone to be desired.

The ב in אנבו is not of the same form as that in the first line; the second line is added by another hand. "A stone to be desired" may be compared to "the stone which the builders rejected" of Psalm cxviii. 22.

No. 74.

ל זכרן ה חם
א עי שלל ק
צץ רוק יהו :

For a memorial for her that is wandering, the ruined heap that hath been gleaned, destroyed, rejected, O Jehovah.

This is a very scholar-like inscription. The ו is carefully distinguished from the ו by the stroke sloping.

In Jerem. xxxi. 22, we have the word חפָק, to wander about, used for those Jews who did not return to Judea when allowed to do so by the Persians. (See No. 11 for this word.)

In Jerem. vi. 9, we have בָּלְל, gleaned, for the ruined state of the nation. We have not often in these inscriptions a word with its full number of feeble letters as here. The words with which the lines end are in each case divided, and continued in the next line.

No. 9 in Grey's collection seems to be another copy of this inscription.

No. 75.

שלם ה ר י
רודה עוזק
ה עי ה רם
יהו :

A peace-offering for the famine of the city, which is trampled on, oppressed, the ruined heap, which is asleep, O Jehovah.

This is a very carefully written inscription, but the Gnostic writer's chief care was so to range his letters, that when read from top to bottom, we should find the word he-he-he-he, which we have in No. 25, and have there endeavoured to explain. In the first line the two letters between ר and ר are doubtful, but the language very much limits our choice. The rest is pretty clear. The ו in the second line is a sloping stroke as often. The pair of letters ר ר are alike in the second and third lines.

Like No. 25, this may be of the second or third century of our era.

No. 76.

ע זכת יר זק
א ה לם לנק
נרכם ירא :
ע

For a memorial of the purified city, the people licked up, bound, put in fear.

The word רַכֵּס, to bind, is in Exod. xxviii. 28, and xxxix. 21.

The single letter below the whole I do not understand. The same letter at the beginning is for the preposition ל, as in No. 32.

No. 78.

שלום עד : ירא דר :

A peace-offering for the congregation, the payment of a vow.

The verb רַקֵּס is to spit; it seems to be used here like our word to liquidate a debt. The ר hangs down behind the ו, but is to be read as if on the other side. The word דר is Chaldee.

No. 80a.

דר שלם עם רקא : חן רץ כא עירה :

O Beloved, a peace-offering for the people cast out; favour, accept the poor of the City.

We do not in the Bible find God so addressed as "O Beloved," but see No. 122. In רַקֵּס we have the Chaldee final ס, while in כא we have that letter of another form. In No. 44 we have, in the same way, the two forms for that letter. In the last word we have a final vowel more than is wanted.

This prayer for the poor of the city reminds us of the custom of sending up alms to Jerusalem, which we read of in the Acts of the Apostles.

No. 80b.

: ? שָׁלֹם

A peace-offering for ?.

This one word is followed by a complex character which I do not understand. It probably represents the writer's own name, as in No. 96b.

No. 80c.

דְּכַרְנוּ נָהָא : שָׁלֹם לִמְמָה
הַ רָאָת חֶרֶץ :

A memorial of lamentation. A peace-offering for the people; the Decree is determined.

This badly written inscription has only one doubtful letter, the letter ת. The writer has added an unnecessary letter to the word לִוְיָה; but perhaps he meant to continue his writing on that line. I take דָתָא for the Hebrew דָתָה, or the Chaldee דָתָא. From the word חֶרֶץ, I venture to think that our pilgrim is referring to Daniel ix. 27, "that which has been determined shall be poured out upon the desolator." He is satisfied that the destruction of the Roman power is at hand.

No. 81.

וְכַרְנוּ הַ עֲנֵה " :
וְכַרְנוּ יְרוּ אָלָם :

A memorial for the afflicted Jerusalem. Slaughter, O Jehovah, Syria.

This carefully cut inscription is Hebrew, not Chaldee, as we see by the first word. It leads us to understand that the form of the נ here is Hebrew, as we have seen that the other form of that letter is Chaldee.

This was probably written soon after the revolt of Judas the Maccabee against the Greco-Syriana, b.c. 166.

No. 82.

דְּהַ קְבָץ : רְנוּ וְקַוְעַד

Thus gather in; make her that hath been thoroughly purified to rejoice.

This is a fragment. The first character has the נ in the form of a loop at the bottom of the נ. The word may be for גְּזָעָה.

In Jerem. xxiii. 3, we have the word קְבָץ in "I will gather up the remnant of my flock," for bringing home the dispersed Israelites at the close of the Captivity, b.c. 538. This was written on some occasion of rejoicing; perhaps on the Maccabee victory over the Greco-Syriana. See No. 76 for the word purified.

This inscription was surrounded by numerous figures of men and animals, representing the crowds that were to be gathered in. The picture explains the word "thua."

No. 83a.

דְּכַרְנוּ עַם דָקָא : חִזְקָעָן :

A memorial for the crushed people. Show favour, accept.

These letters stand upon a line which hides the bottom stroke of each, and thus removes the distinction between נ, כ, and ג. There are several inscriptions in Mr. Grey's collection which are made illegible by such a line. The next line I do not understand.

No. 83b.

שלום חלוף עם
מקה ד "

*A peace-offering for the wound of the people, mocked **.*

In Job xx. 24, חלוף is to strike, to wound, though it more often means to change. The word מקה here confirms the doubtful readings in No. 65 and No. 138.

No. 84.

דכין : דן רצ
ער דק ירו :
עיר קראא
חלש :

A memorial. Show favour, accept the crushed city, O Jehovah. The renowned ornament is cut off.

All the letters in the first line are joined together. The נ in the fourth line faces the wrong way. In Ezek. vii. 20, עיר, ornament, is used for the costly temple-service; and no doubt that is here meant. In No. 145c we have the word קראא, renowned; here it has a final נ in addition.

This may have been written when Antiochus Epiphanes, B.C. 167, stopped the daily sacrifice in the Temple.

No. 85.

בד דדהם :

These words are followed by a cross representative of Christianity, as in No. 86b. Thus tread down lying Christianity. At the beginning of the line is the complex character, with which No. 82 begins.

The word דדהם I read as דדהש; the two letters are often interchanged. Buxtorf, in his Lexicon to the Talmud, has the word דהס as bruised. The word "thus" may perhaps have been explained by the action of the figures around, which Mr. Grey mentions, but does not describe. In No. 156 we render בד as lonely, which is also its meaning in Hebrew; but here the cross of the hated Christianity points to its other meaning.

No. 86a.

שלום ה קש קו
חן עה לונ : ירו שנח :

A peace-offering for the stubble that hath been put away. Favour the despised ruin; O Jehovah, change.

In No. 23 the unhappy nation is compared to stubble. In Ezek. xxiii. 22, we have the word עיר, alienated, turned away, which explains our word קו. The word לנו is Chaldee, softened from the Hebrew עבָד, to despise. But perhaps the word is not לנו, but לנו, not, meaning that is destroyed; and the character which I have taken as נ in the second line, may be the middle letter of the word עיר in the first line. See No. 36a for a נ so written. But yet more probable is it that this character, joined on as it is to another, is to do duty in both lines, as נ in the first line, and as נ in the second. We have examples to support this conjecture in No. 65, No. 138, and No. 172. No. 51 ends with the same prayer to Jehovah, in the word "change."

No. 86b.

שלום ה לם ר
ק נקא ל שר
ל לק :

This is followed by a cross for Christianity.

A peace-offering for the rejected people, guiltless, on behalf of what remains, on behalf of the society of Christianity.

The word ק, rejected, is divided, and the latter letter, at the beginning of the second line, has been made useful as an animal's head. The next word might be read אַקְרָב, but seeing what it follows, אַקְפָּה is more probable. In No. 72 we have the same word "guiltless," which is here to be understood not as denying the justice of God's punishment, but the justice of the Roman government. The word פֶלֶם may be explained by הַקְרָבָה, a company, in 1. Sam. xix. 20.

Our inscription may have been written by a Jewish Christian in the second century.

No. 87.

וְרַשְׁמֵם חַל : רַב קָז
הַחֲמָק : קָמֵם דָרָן
יְרוֹ:

A vow of a profane [or unworthy] peace-offering. Increase her that is cut short, her that is wandering, raise up the generations, O Jehovah.

The word יְרוֹ is Chaldee for a vow.

The word חֲמָק, wandering, we had in No. 11 and No. 74. The last two letters in דָרָן are joined in an unusual manner, which makes the word doubtful. It has the Chaldee plural termination. The writer was under a vow to make this pilgrimage, and the inscription is a proof that he had performed his vow.

No. 88.

שְׁלָמָם דָו : רַנְנָא עַמְרִיך :

A sickly peace-offering; make the rejected people to rejoice triumphantly.

From יְרוֹ, to sing, we have the duplicate form רַנְנָא, to rejoice thoroughly. Such an expression belongs to a time of triumph. See No. 91e.

Two lines from No. 89:—

שְׁלָמָם
עַמְרִיך יְרַכְּ צָר :

Mr. Grey's note upon this is "Uncertain." The rest of the inscription may have been badly copied.

A peace-offering for the broken people of Jerusalem, wholly afflicted.

No. 90.

זְכָרְן : חַזְקָץ
שְׁלוֹא יְרוֹ
B Φ

A memorial. Favour her that is cut short, failing, O Jehovah.

This is badly written. The y is divided, as is often the case. In Hebrew חַלְלָה is quiet, in Chaldee failing.

The Greek letters tell us that it is of a late time. They may represent the writer's name.

No. 91a.

דְּכָרֵן הַחֲמָקָא עַנְדָה נְגַר יְהֹוָה :
הַדָּרָא קָאָקָעָ רַנְנָא יְהֹוָה :

A memorial for her that is wandering, tied about the neck, O Jehovah. This is a print-mark of rejoicing, O Jehovah.

נְגַר We have the word חֲמָק in No. 87 and No. 126. The ר in is a wavy line drawn downwards as in No. 22, &c.

The word יְפָפָה, for a print-mark, or incision, is used in Levit. xix. 28. It is a suitable word for an inscription cut in the rock. The first word in the second line, whether read as הַדָּרָא or חֲמָק, is in either case the Chaldee this.

The thought of a memorial being "tied about the neck" is borrowed in the very words from Prov. vi. 21. That the inscription on the rock should be called such a memorial is not a more violent figure of speech than that used in Exod. xiii. 9, where the unleavened bread eaten at the feast is said to be for "a sign to thee upon thy hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes." The inscription probably belongs to the time of the Maccabee success against the Greco-Syrians.

No. 91b.

ע שָׁלֹם יְרֵנָה קָרַח : הַלְבֵשׂ יְהוָה :

*For a peace-offering for the guiltless city, that is awakened.
Clothe it, O Jehovah.*

The first letter I take as representing the preposition by. The word qrh I have usually rendered cut short; here I venture to take it, qrh, awakened, which suits better with the word which follows, and with the next inscription, which is from the same piece of rock. Hebrew writing is full of words thus chosen playfully. If the nation has been awakened by the Maccabees from its sleep, it may be said to need clothing. The Hiphil form of the verb is unusual in these inscriptions.

No. 91c.

: * * שָׁלֹם הַנֶּחָקָה הַנִּמְקָדָשׁ :

*For a peace-offering for the rest of one who is disturbed, the sleeping one who is awakened, * **

The writer has made the one letter y serve for the beginning of this line and of the last, No. 91b. The translation here is less satisfactory, because the end of the line is broken. But the one confirms the other. We have here yp, the Niphal of qrh, as above we had the Hiphil form of a verb. The writer was evidently a man of exactness.

No. 91d.

ל דְּכָרְנוּ לְקָצָא עַי דְּהָא : עֹור לְהַרְחֵץ :

*For a memorial, for her that is cut short, the sick heap of ruins.
Help thou to beautify the piece that has been cut short.*

Here again we have thoughts which belong to a time of hope.

No. 91e.

ע שָׁלֹם שְׁעָנָה לְשָׁחָר עַי עַר הַלְּקֵץ : עַי רְנָן :

For a peace-offering, for support unto the humbled Jerusalem, the city that had passed away; the heap of ruins sings triumphantly.

Though the letters here are very much entangled, there is very little doubt about them. In rnx the n hangs below the w. In ry, city, the r, as usual, hangs below. The yy I understand to mean Jerusalem, instead of the " of the other inscriptions.

The division of the words may in some places be doubtful. We have hlk, passed away, used absolutely in Eccl. i. 4, and Jerom. xxii. 10. We have the word rnrx, to sing triumphantly, in No. 88. The doubled form of the verb marks strong feeling. The above five inscriptions in No. 91 seem to be the work of one hand; and the purpose of the writing shows that they are so. Each confirms the translation of the others, and they, no doubt, belong to the time of the Maccabee rebellion. They may be the peace-offerings and memorial offerings of five friends who made the pilgrimage in company, and who allowed one of the party, a better writer than the rest, to imprint upon the rock these words for himself and his four companions.

The two letters yy, which seem to mean Jerusalem, may represent the yy, ruined ruin of No. 22, or perhaps 'y y, a ruin of ruins. As the Jews of Egypt gave to these words the softer sound of Ai Ai, they may be originals of the ", which more often mean Jerusalem, as in No. 17. The inscriptions with the word or letters " may be more modern than these.

No. 91f.

שְׁלָמָן לֹג מִזְגָּן : רַם ה
לְנָעַל יְרוֹן :

A peace-offering for her that is mocked, saint. Raise up therefore her that is defiled, O Jehovah.

There is much here that is doubtful. Though on the same piece of rock with the former, it is not by the same hand. I render the second word as if it were מִזְגָּן, supposing the y to be softened, as in the case of the Chaldee לְגָן, to mock. I take הַלְּגָן as the Chaldee, therefore, like the לְגָן with the same meaning in No. 55b. It seems to refer to the foregoing inscription, as of course it is the later of the two. The word בָּלֵי we had in No. 74, though more correctly spelt with a second b. In Job xvi. 15, it is rendered defiled. The city at the time of the Maccabee rebellion may well be said to have been defiled.

No. 91g.

שְׁלָמָן לְעֵינָק נִבְקָע :

Prosper the ruined heap that groans, having been broken up.

No. 91h.

שְׁלָמָן חֹצֵא סְלָעָן יְרֵב יְרוֹן :
קְרֵחָן : רַחֲנָעֶך :

A peace-offering for the outside of the rock, the plundered city, O Jehovah.

The bald one rejoices. Refresh her that has been set in order.

For the word רַחְנָעֶך, see רַחְנָעָן in No. 91a. In each case the ר has been drawn down behind the letter instead of being in front of it. The word רַחְנָעֶך I can only understand by supposing that the first letter has been reversed, as is sometimes the case. I read it as בְּנָה, plundered, a word which we have in No. 100. Remark that בְּ is a long stroke, and בְּ a short stroke, in בְּנָה.

We have seen that the upper inscriptions on this piece of rock may be supposed to be of the hopeful time of the Maccabee struggle; and we may conjecture that this belongs to the time when for twenty years the castle of Jerusalem, here called Sela, the rock, was able to resist the attacks of the city. The city is here called "the outside of Sela," and it seems to have been "set in order," or reduced to regular government, first by Judas, and then by Simon.

This explanation of our inscription is supported by Psalms ix. and cviii., written when the Maccabees were not masters of the castle of Jerusalem, which was held against them by the nobles of Judah, whom they reproachfully called Edomites. Psalm ix. aaka,—

Who will bring me into the besieged city? who will lead me into Edom?
meaning, as I suppose, into the castle. Psalm cviii. says,—

Who will bring me into the city of Mibzar?

Mibzar is another name for Sela, or Petra, the rock, and it supports our conjecture that "the outside of the rock" may be Jerusalem, when the city was not master of the castle.

No. 94.

שְׁלָמָן יְרֵב דְּקָע : קְרֵחָן :

A peace-offering for the crushed city of the congregation. Raise up the rejected one.

After the return from Captivity the congregation of Israel, meaning the true Jews as opposed to the strangers living among them, was named נְקָדָם. (See Ezra and Nehemiah, and the Lexicon to the Talmud.) Before the Captivity it was named עַדְתָּה. (See Exod., Lev., and Numb.)

No. 95a.

זכרןUA ארי כל דם יהו :

A memorial for the ruined heap of the lion [city], which is wholly blood, O Jehovah.

The first word would be quite illegible without the help of the other inscriptions; the rest is pretty clear. In the second and third words one נ is joined to the other.

Jerusalem is called in Isaish xxix. 1, ארי אל, the lion of God; and here it bears the same name.

No. 95b.

שלם קד עה אדרUA שור ה קר דח : קומ
עך רך : שומ יר דר
יהו :

A humble peace-offering for the ruin that has been cursed, the ruin of the wall of the city that is cast away. Raise up her that is afflicted, broken. Preserve the beloved city, O Jehovah.

The three letters grouped in one character, here read as שׁוֹמ, wall, are seen in No. 117, but there they are better formed.

This inscription, which is on the same stone as the last, plays upon the words there used, and calls the city, not the "ruins of the lion," but the "ruins cursed."

No. 95c.

No. 96a.

Here we have the same two letters for Jerusalem as in No. 91e.

No. 96b.

דרכן פ ברח ק
א רע זר :

A memorial for ?, driven away, vomited forth, and his foreign companion.

We have the word בָּרָח in No. 44, and מְפִלֵּה in No. 64. The writer puts an unknown character for his own name. In No. 1 we have the same letters, רָע, זָר, for his foreign companion, or wife.

No. 97.

שלם ה קצא
קוץ ירו :

A peace-offering for the end cut off, O Jehovah.

We have the same group of letters, which I read as צַפְאָה, in No. 27c, and in No. 55.

No. 98.

דברון ל רתקא
חו צק
יעאלנו רד ירו :

A memorial for her that is rejected. Favour the oppressed, the vile heap of ruins, that is trampled on, O Jehovah.

The ל in the first line is doubtful; but we have that letter better sbsolutely, and means Lengthen the life. Thus our inscription means Lengthen the life of the broken city. As the Book of Ecclesiastes was written about B.C. 220, we naturally find it in agreement with these inscriptions.

No. 106a.

דְּרֹן אַמֵּל : נָעַל : רָן עַם רָק :

A feeble memorial; they are defiled; make the rejected people to rejoice.

The words and may be doubtful. The other letters are perfectly plain, though in a loose running hand. The little sloping stroke after the ֶ is ִ. The word נָעַל may be the Niphal of לָלַי, to defile.

The letters are of an early form. This might belong to the time of the Maccabee success.

No. 106b.

שָׁלֵם לוּם זָב דָק קָד נְכַרֵי יְהוָה :

A peace-offering for a people that melts away, is broken, bowed down, made alien, O Jehovah.

In the ֶ is small, the ַ hangs down below the ָ. The ַ in נְכַרֵי joins the ָ in יְהוָה. But I think no word is doubtful. We have the word נְכַרֵי in No. 152.

No. 107.

וְכַרְוֵן זָנָב
צָאן קָז :

Memorial for the tail of a sheep cut off.

Every letter is distinct in this interesting inscription, except the letters ַָָן, which are joined together. The first word has its full number of letters, whereas it usually has only four letters.

The writer probably had in his mind the words of Amos iii. 12, in which the prophet compares the northern Israelites in their ruined state to the two legs and piece of an ear of a sheep, which had been left when a lion had devoured the rest. As it is Hebrew, not Chaldee, we may suppose that our writer was an educated man.

No. 109.

שָׁלֵם : שָׁמָן חַן עַר עַי שָׁח :

A peace-offering. Give rest, favour the city that is a ruin, bowed down.

Some of these letters are very doubtful.

No. 110.

שָׁלֵם יְהֻעָק
נְחַמְּד רָק יְהֹוָה :

No. 111.

דְּכַרְנֵן עַם :

This is followed by a Christian cross like that in No. 86.

A memorial for the people.

As there is no word of enmity to the cross, we may suppose that this was by a Jewish Christian, and if so, before the separation between Jews and Christians in the third century.

No. 112.

שָׁלֵם הַקְזָא לוּם הַנוּעַל ר :

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, the injured people, O Jehovah.

The final letter probably represents the word Jehovah. Our word נוּעַל may be from the verb עָלָה, which we have in Isaiah xxvi. 10, and Psalm lxxi. 4.

No. 113.

מ זכרן : חן רצא : חרם עשין :

A part of a memorial. Show favour, be gracious. Utterly destroy the rich men.

This inscription has several peculiarities. It begins with the preposition מ, as does No. 178, instead of the more usual נ. This word I understand to mean a part of. The ת in תְּכִלֵּת is Hebrew, while רָאַת is Chaldee, as is the plural termination of the last word.

I conjecture that the name of the enemies who are devoted to destruction has been purposely spelt wrong; beginning with y instead of n, thus concealing the writer's meaning. The enemies meant are probably the Greco-Syrians under Antiochus Epiphanes, who are called אֲשֶׁר in Numbers xxiv. 22 and 24. In Isaiah liii. 9, we seem to have שָׂרֵץ, rich man, in the same cautious way, written, as I conjecture, for אֲשֶׁר, Assyrian. Speaking of Zerubbabel, who had looked forward to dying in Babylon, the writer says, "By the transgression of my people violence came upon him; and he prepared his grave with the wicked men, and with the rich man among his dead men." The wicked men are the Babylonians; the rich man is the Assyrian tyrant whose monarchy had been before overthrown, and who is described in Isaiah xiv. 4-20, as lying in hell among his dead men, and waiting to receive the Babylonian king.

The two passages support one another, and lead us to think that in each שָׂרֵץ is written for אֲשֶׁר, not carelessly, but for reasons of prudence.

Our inscription may have been written between 175 and 142 B.C., about the same time as No. 81, in which the enemy is called אֲרָם, or Syria.

As the Jews living in Egypt had no opportunity of placing a real offering on the altar to Jehovah until Onias IV. built that at Onion, B.C. 149, our inscription, which is called the "part of a memorial offering," could not have been written earlier.

No. 114a.

שלם רעו קרע קר רק ירו :

A lean peace-offering for the torn portion of the rejected city, O Jehovah.

The word רָעָן is not known; but it may be taken to be from קָרָה, to grow lean. I suppose קָרָע to be written for קָרְתָּה or city, as in No. 40.

This might have been written in the time of the Maccabees, when for twenty-three years a part of the city was held by the enemy.

שור עי רו דוד חזק יהו :

The wall of the famished beloved heap of ruins is the bosom of Jehovah.

The only doubtful letter in this interesting inscription is the ה in the first word. It is made doubtful by being lengthened upwards so as to give to it the form of a cross, and thus indirectly to show the writer's Christianity.

No. 119.

שלום עם רך לך עם דח צ
: צ

A peace-offering for the people rejected and passed away, the people driven away, cut short.

The letter צ at the end of the first line seems not wanted. Possibly the first letter in the word was omitted, and then the omission supplied in the second line.

No. 120.

שלום לום ה לו ום לך מק
: מק

A peace-offering for a people that is not, a nation passed away, despised.

The words לו and ום are doubtful. The first we have in No. 48a and No. 149a; the second may be for מחה, a nation, which we have in No. 123b. The letter ל is here often used for נ.

No. 121.

ל ה זברו * * זה קצק ער
זק ארה עיר : חן רץ :

*For the memorial. * * her that is cut short, made bare, purified, gathered, awakened. Favour, accept.*

After the word "memorial" we have a space. The word קצק is for קצפ, with the harshness of the last letter softened. The word פְּרִת, to purify, is used in a moral sense in Malachi iii. 1. The word עיר is doubtful.

No. 122.

דד שלם עם רקה : חן רץ
חן נד זורה :

O Beloved, a peace-offering for the cast-out people; show favour, accept the cast away, wandering, scattered.

In No. 80a, also, God is so addressed as O Beloved. The first letter in the last word is doubtful.

No. 123a.

דכח נחץ :

A memorial of one who has fled away.

The writer so styles himself. He had fled from the oppression of his country's conquerors.

No. 123b.

שלום אמרה ול : עוזר :

A peace-offering for the despised nation. Give help.

In Lam. i. 8, we have the word גָּזֵל, to despise; but the first letter in the word is doubtful. We have the word נַכְנָא in No. 105, and סַמְּן for סַמְּן with the same meaning in No. 120.

No. 124.

ונרנו ייר זק :
רנו ה לם ל קץ
ירו מורה :

A memorial for the city that hath been purified [by sufferings]. Make the people to rejoice at last, O Jehovah, who art to be feared.

The first word in the second line is doubtful, but our reading of it is made probable by No. 91b. In Isaiah viii. 12, 13, we have כורא as an object of reverence.

This interesting inscription, like No. 91b, probably belongs to the time of the Maccabee successes.

No. 125.

שלום חן רקה ננה :

A peace-offering for one that is cut down, crushed, sore wounded.

See No. 172 for our word חן. I venture to take ננה as the same as יגַג, wounded. The last letter is softened, as is not uncommon in Chaldee.

No. 126.

שלום חמוֹק :
כְּנָהָלֶה יְרוֹ:

A peace-offering for her that is wandering; establish her that is mad [with oppression], O Jehovah.

We had the word פָּרָת in No. 91a, and elsewhere. For our word חֲלֵדָה see Eccl. vii. 7, "Oppression maketh the wise man mad." But perhaps the second ה is a mistake, and we should read דָלָת, cast off, as in No. 13.

This inscription may have been written in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, fifty years after the Book of Ecclesiastes.

No. 127.

שׁן : שלם נקל נוקה נקי :

Do Thou change. A worthless peace-offering for her that is wholly guiltless.

We have the prayer for a change in No. 40 and No. 51. The last two words are only slightly different from those used towards Edom, in Jerem. xl ix. 12, that it shall not be "wholly unpunished."

The writer shows his love for alliteration.

No. 128.

דְּכָרְנוּ הַצָּא עַעַ ר
צְזָרָא : רְחִירַה שָׁר
רְקִירַו :

A memorial for her that is driven forth, Jerusalem, which is rejected, scattered; refresh the city that remaineth rejected, O Jehovah.

These expressions might belong to the time of the Captivity, but the writing has no appearance of antiquity.

No. 129.

שְׁלָמָם לְוָמָה רְשָׁה
שְׁלִיר " "
הַקְּצָב :

A peace-offering for the poor nation, O Jehovah. Prosper the city of Jerusalem, that has been cut short.

For the two horizontal strokes meaning Jehovah, see No. 25 and No. 28. The ו in the word שְׁלָמָם is badly formed. I take that word as the imperative of שְׁלָמָה. The letter ק in the last line is separated into two parts by the ר in the second line. This inscription proves that in other inscriptions, it was not from a fault in Mr. Grey's copy that the letter was so divided.

No. 130.

דְּכָרְנוּ לְקָה
רְקָק : צָוָר
צָק עַדְר
דְּקָה : נָזָר הַנָּזִי
קְצָב יְרוֹ :

A memorial for the society which is spit upon. Favour her that is crushed, made bare, broken. Separate [as a Nazarite] her who laments, being cut short, O Jehovah.

In 1 Sam. xix. 20, we have גְּמֻתָּה, a company. The word may perhaps be used for the society of Christians, as in No. 86b, or it may be a mistake for בְּלָגָם, the usual word for the congregation of Israel. I suppose רְקָק to be for רְקָעָה, with the last letter softened, as in No. 22 and No. 121. The fourth line ends with a doubtful letter.

No. 133.

שְׁלָמָם הַקְּצָב עַדְר :

A peace-offering for her that is distressed, the purified city.

These letters are badly formed, and the middle letter of the first word is badly placed.

No. 134.

שלום : שם ח לש

A peace-offering. Give the kneaded [dough].

The writer may mean that he has given the kneaded dough to the priest at Onion, and does not mean his inscription to be the whole of his peace-offering.

No. 135.

שלום : שם רשות
יר עקל :

A peace-offering. Prosper the poor of the city that hath been wronged.

See No. 59a for another example of מִלְשׁ being repeated; but there a difference is made in the spelling between the noun and the verb.

No. 136.

שלום יר רקה : דן ריק
קח חץ אש :

A peace-offering for the crushed city; contend for the broken one; take a fiery dart.

In the second line the first and the second מ are unlike; but they are both met with in these inscriptions.

No. 137.

שלום : שם נח : חן שח

A peace-offering. Give rest, favour her that is bowed down.

I read this by the help of No. 109, which tells us that the character looking like נ is ח, that we have מ and מ joined, and that the final two strokes may again be מ.

No. 138.

שלום עיר עקש הלהה
מקרה לאה אָר קשׁ :

A peace-offering for the perverse city, cast off, despised, weary, cursed, stubborn.

In this interesting inscription it will be seen that the second line makes use of the letter מ, which had already been used in the first line. In No. 65 this letter in the same way is to be read in both lines. Again we find another help in No. 65, where the letter מ, which ends the word פָּנַת in the second line, is also used for the end of הלהה in the first line. The circular flourish at the end of the first line is the letter מ, as we see in No. 139b. We have here also the same fanciful writing. The ר in אָר hangs down below the first letter in the word. The ו is of a different form from that usual in these inscriptions, and more like our printed letter. We have the same in No. 62; but here it is in a place which allows of no doubt.

The writer seems to be very much dissatisfied with what was going on in Jerusalem, which city was often torn to pieces by the angry passions of the parties who were struggling for power. This belongs to Christian times, as we judge from the ornamental writing, but to a time before the city was destroyed by the Romans.

No. 139a.

שלום לם ה אולא חל ה לק
ד ירו : חן רצא קהא קיר נלל מק :

A peace-offering for the people which is failing, sick, which hath been gleaned, O Jehovah. Favour, accept the blindness of the city which is brought to an end, despised.

We had the word אֹולֶל in No. 99a, with the same doubt about the second letter. I take לְקָל to stand for מְפָל, to glean; in No. 152 the ו is a double ו. This word is used figuratively for thoroughly plundered in Issiah xvii. 5.

In No. 114α we had רַק, for city. Our word נָלַל may be from נָלַל, to bring to an end. נְתַרֵּפֶת, blindness, is Chaldee.

No. 139b.

לְדִכְרָן : חֹן צָא עַם רַק : רְשָׁן וְדָה :

For a memorial. Favour her that is driven forth, the rejected people. The bone-ashes of her that has been unwell.

I consider נָזֶב as the same as נָזָב of No. 128. In the last word the circular flourish is the letter ה of the form met with in No. 27.

The last two words are used proverbially.

By Leviticus xv., when a woman had been נְזָהָה, sick, and had recovered, she was ordered to bring to the priest two young pigeons, one for a sin offering, and one for a burnt-offering. By Leviticus v. 11, 12, a person who was not rich enough to bring such a gift might bring a tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, of which the priest was to burn upon the altar a handful as a memorial. By Leviticus vi. 11, the priest was ordered, when the offering was ended, to put off his holy garments, and to carry forth the bone-ashes beyond the camp, as impure, but not as wholly so, for they were to be cast forth into a clean place. Thus of all that is offered to Jehovah these ashes are the least valuable; and yet in this humble way the writer describes his memorial inscription as the bone-ashes of a woman who has been sick.

(See No. 91a, where, with an equally violent figure of speech, the inscription is called a memorial to be tied about the neck.)

No. 139c.

וְכַרְנֵן חַל : רְצָא הַנִּי הַלְּבָד רַק יְרוֹן :

An unholy [or unworthy] memorial. Accept the lamentation of a broken heart, O Jehovah.

No. 140.

נְעַה דָּל עַיר אֲנָע עַי :

The weak lowing of the city reduced to nought, to a heap of ruins.

The word נָעַ is doubtful. I understand it as נָאָן, vanity, or nothing. We may suppose that עַיָּה is a strengthened form of עַי.

The lowing of cattle is here used for a cry of grief.

No. 141.

דְּכַרְנֵן רְדָד נְכֹר עַק
קָעַם רַק נְדָמֵי נְקֵדָה : שְׁלָמָה :

A memorial for one that is trampled on, made strange, pressed down, of the people cast out, destroyed, of the guiltless city. A peace-offering.

The first letter in the second line may be part of the last word in the first line.

We here meet with the word עַק, a city, for the twentieth time; and if it needs any support it may receive it, not only from the word Jerusalem, as before remarked, but also from Jericho. The name of this town is usually written עַירְחוֹ, and we may conjecture that it began to be written עַירְחוֹ, they scatter scent, only when the plantation of palm-trees and balsam-trees was formed there. The fertility of Jericho, which allowed of this plantation, is, in 2 Kings ii., given to the reign of Jehoshaphat, as caused by Elisha's miracle; but it more probably was due to works of irrigation introduced by the Persians. The original name of Jericho, עַרְחוֹ, may be translated the hamlet city.

The names also of the towns Jarmuth, Irpeel, and Jorkeam, all begin with this word עַרְחוֹ.

No. 142a.

שְׁלָמָם לְדַמָּה לְשָׁר
לְדַלְךָ :

A peace-offering for what is cut short, for what remains, for the crushed poor.

I do not understand the letter under the first line.

This inscription begins with a Christian cross, and may be by a Jewish Christian in the second century. The thought for the poor of the city is what we read of in the Apostle Paul's Epistles.

In No. 91g we had in the same way the preposition ל after the word שְׁלָמָם. Here two forms of the ל are used, both remarkably clearly written.

No. 142b.

: עֵיר דָק

For the crushed city.

I consider the ו as representing the preposition בְּ, as also in No. 91b, and No. 156.

No. 143.

דְּכָרֶן עֵיר דָק
עֲאָקָר לְקִירוֹ :

A memorial for the crushed city, the ruins of the town licked up, O Jehovah.

In Ezek. xxi. 27, we have תְּבוּ, a ruin; our word תְּבוּ may be a Chaldee form of it, or for the Hebrew תְּבוּ, which we have in No. 74. We have רָקָה, a town, in No. 114a. In No. 86b we read רָלָה as a company; here we take it as the Chaldee תְּבוּ, destroyed.

No. 144.

דְּכָרֶן מִנְמָל
עַמְץ :

A memorial from the strong camel.

The word גָּמָל, camel, is doubtful; the two strokes against the מ may represent the ג; but there was the figure of a beast of burden loaded before the last word. The word עַמְץ is Chaldee for the Hebrew מַעַז.

No. 145b.

וְכָרֶן מִעֲרָן נְקָא :
עַנוּדָה לְנָר :

A memorial from the guiltless city, to be tied about the neck.

The word נָר is badly spelt, but this may be safely read by the help of No. 91a, where we have the same thought and words, of the memorial being "tied about the neck." We have here the preposition ל in an unusual place, as in No. 144.

No. 145c.

וְכָרֶן שֶׁר רַתְק
הַקְרָא :

Memorial for the enslaved city, which is renowned.

The word רַתְק is well known, but perhaps of doubtful meaning.

No. 146a.

שְׁלָמָם עַם מִקָּא :

A peace-offering for the people pining away, O Jehovah.

The two strokes which, when vertical, I have always read as a symbol for Jerusalem, are by modern writers used for Jehovah, and they may be so understood here as in No. 25 and No. 28. The strokes for Jerusalem are vertical, these are horizontal.

No. 147.

דר רכון מ נס בק : רום ליק :

*A vow, a memorial from her that is asleep, depopulated.
Raise her that hath been licked up.*

See the preposition בְּ in No. 145b, and the word לָקַח in No. 46. This may mean it "has been slain," and had its blood licked up by dogs.

The two letters with which this inscription begins may mean that it is a Nazaritic vow, being a word formed from the Chaldee נְדָר, to vow.

No. 160 is a second copy of the same inscription.

No. 148a.

שלם זההן קזא רוק :
יב למ ל בוק :

A lean peace-offering for her that is bowed down, broken. The people melts away unto emptiness.

No. 148b.

שלם עה לום : רם צד
עט רק :

A peace-offering for the ruin of the nation; raise her that is laid waste, the rejected people.

These characters are of very fanciful forms. The וֹ is on the top of the תִּ. The יְ rises out of the לִ, and has the little וּ on its top. (See the little וּ in No. 134.)

No. 149a.

שלום שך ה לו עיר רוא רץ :

A humble peace-offering for her that is not, the city famished, crushed, oppressed.

The רַ in the last word is doubtful. (See No. 48a for the word לֵדָה.)

No. 149b.

שלום ה עא ה נר : שם נח
ירו :

*A peace-offering for the heap of ruins which has been plowed up.
Give rest, O Jehovah.*

The two letters here taken as נְרַ are joined into a group very like that in No. 70, which I read as רֵי.

These two inscriptions belong to a time after the destruction of the Temple by Titus.

No. 150.

ל דכון שט דחקא :
שאי ה מרק ירו :

For a memorial for the vexed people, the ruined heap which is rejected, O Jehovah.

The word מרק bears the meaning of rejected, despised, in Chaldee. The word ירָוֶה is for רָוֶה.

No. 152.

דכוּ : חמל עיר : וּן עט רק
א מבט קד נכרו יהו :

A memorial. Pity the city; make the people to rejoice, who are rejected, hoping, bowed down, made to be aliens, O Jehovah.

This, though written in a flowing running hand, is perfectly legible. The unknown letter following the מ ב in the second line we may take for ו. It is like a double ע.

No. 153.

מ עם עץ : זכרן לוץ קאו :

From the oppressed people. A memorial of one mocked, vomited out.

The first letter is not wholly formed. The ש is of the Greek form, but it slopes the wrong way. The word וְאַתָּה is perhaps a mistake for וְאַיִל. In Chaldee נְאַיֵּל is to oppress.

No. 154a.

שלם ה לם נקץ :

A peace-offering for the people that is awakened.

This last word might be read as the Niphal of יָצַר, and mean cut short; but as all unnecessary letters are usually omitted, the above is to be preferred.

This inscription is an example of how the reading is obscured by the line upon which the letters stand.

No. 156.

ע שלם מען בר : שלם ק ירו :

For the peace-offering of a lonely feast; a peace-offering , O Jehovah.

In Psalm xxxv. 16, מִנְחָה is a feast. The y at the beginning may be for הַי, as in No. 91b, and elsewhere. The single letter פ represents some unfinished word.

A peace-offering was a gift to the altar, which the worshipper shared as a feast with the priest, and with his friends, after burning a memorial portion as incense to Jehovah. Hence, as the traveller is alone, without friends, he calls his inscription "the peace-offering of a lonely feast."

No. 157.

שלום : חוץ רקך נד רהדר רוש :
ע חדר שך :

A peace-offering. Favour one spit on, wandering, trampled on, poor. For a girding of sackcloth.

The word רְהַדֶּר in Chaldee is to surround; in Hebrew it is a chamber. See No. 40, where we have a "girding of sackcloth."

No. 158.

רכרן נתק "ע מ רק :

A memorial of the braying of Jerusalem, the rejected people.

This is very badly written, and very doubtful. The word נתק means the braying of an ass. The Jews in Egypt suffered very severely for the rashness of Jerusalem in rebelling against the Romans.

The writer may have belonged to northern Israel, and have been no friend to Jerusalem.

No. 159.

שלום מ ברא טום :

A peace-offering from a fat horse.

See No. 22 for the same word horse.

This inscription seems ironical, or rather scoffing, among the pious prayers with which it is surrounded.

No. 162a.

שְׁלָמָם מִעֲמָם
עַם מִרְחָה :

A peace-offering from the peoples; for the crushed people.

The מ as a preposition is doubtful. The second line is added by another hand. We have the word מִרְחָה, broken, in Leviticus xxi. 20, which will justify our rendering of the last word.

No. 164.

שְׁלָמָם
לְקַצֵּן
קוֹץ :

A peace-offering for the end cut off.

We have these words in No. 97, but without the preposition. Such is the melancholy way in which the nation is described.

No. 165.

עַה רְקָא
הַנּוּל
רְקָא :

The ruined heap cast off, that which has been injured, rejected.

The second line is doubtful. The word לְיֻנוּ is regularly formed from לְיֻנָּה, to benefit; but it more probably means injured, from לְיֻנָּה, to injure, as we have read it in No. 112.

No. 167.

שְׁלָמָם מֶלֶעָר
אַסְפָּל נֶר לְיָדוֹ
נְחַבָּא :

The space in the first line held the figure of a camel, and may have also held the letter ג.

A peace-offering for the camel's foal, to be gathered up upon the neck, beloved of Jehovah.

The word Jehovah is doubtful; but the complex character towards the end of the second line seems to begin with an ה and to end with an ע, each a down-stroke; the up-stroke in the middle seems merely to unite them. In No. 3 we have וְה united into one character in the same manner.

The word שְׁלָמָם often means to gather up the rear of the army; hence the feeble foal, having been born in the desert, if laid upon its mother's neck, is said to be gathered up.

But I rather consider the words as proverbial, meaning "to be taken care of," and borrowed from a custom, which is shown on Egyptian figures older than Christianity, of the good shepherd carrying the lamb on his shoulders, with its feet held around his neck.

The last word might be rendered hidden; but may also be from חַבְבָּה, to love.

No. 168.

בָּא יְעַמֵּךְ :

Oppressed Jerusalem pines away.

The Hebrew וּבָבָב may give us our first word. We have פְּבָב, or פְּבָבָב, in No. 141.

No. 169.

שְׁלָמָם עַם מִקְּדָשׁ
וְתִ " שְׁלוֹ :

A peace-offering for the despised people; the olive of Jerusalem fails.

In Jerem. xi. 16, Jerusalem is called a green olive-tree.

No. 171.

שלום לְ רָהֲקָא הַ קֵּן :
לְכָה קְשָׁה רָחִי יְהוָה :

A peace-offering for her that is cast out, that is cut short; lead, gather together, refresh, O Jehovah.

In No. 164, as in Deut. vii. 10, שְׁלֵמָה is followed by the preposition לְ; here we have the double letter. In Exod. xxxiii. 14, Jehovah says, "My presence shall lead and give thee rest," using the word which we have here rendered to lead, or to go with my one.

No. 172.

שלום עַק תְּזַעַן
כְּנָם : חָנֵן יְהוָה :

A peace-offering for her that is pressed down, cut down, faint. Show favour, O Jehovah.

The word שְׁלֵמָה, cut down, is found in Isaiah xviii. 5, as the Hiphil of this verb. Our word establishes its root. I take the שׁ of the first line to be also the first letter in the second line, as in No. 138 and others. The second letter in שְׁלֵמָה is doubtful.

No. 173.

: נְחָמָם שְׁקָר :

False compassion.

The first word may be doubtful. The שׁ is not wholly formed. The writer might be a good Israelite, and yet no friend to Jerusalem. This is from a valley near to Sarabet el Kadeim.

No. 174.

שלום לאם אל שְׂדֵה יְהוָה :

A peace-offering for the people, O God Almighty, Jehovah.

The second and third לְ have somewhat of the Greek form.

For the Hebrew קֵן we have שְׁדֵה. This is the only one of our inscriptions which so addresses God.

No. 176.

דְּכָרֵן : חָנֵן הַ
נְעַם רָק :

A memorial. Favour her that is vomited forth, Beauty that is rejected.

Zechariah, in ch. xi. 7, uses this very word "Beauty," as it seems, for the kingdom of Judah. In Daniel, though with a different Hebrew word, Jerusalem is called "Beauty" in ch. viii. 9, and in ch. xi. 45, Zion is called "the holy mountain of Beauty."

No. 177.

שלום קְהֻצָּא
עַם רָק יְהוָה :

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, the broken people, O Jehovah.

No. 178 [on Plate 13].

ט זְכָרֵן הַ קֵּן : נְחָדָר בָּרוּךְ יְהוָה
Μνησθή αυτος Ερσου
Καλιταιον Μαρου.
εμ*λθοι.

A part of a memorial for her that is cut short. Give rest to poor Baruk, O Jehovah.

May he himself, the son of Heresh, שְׁרֵה, the son of Kelita, נְכִילָה, the son of Marah, מָרָה, be remembered.

The first line begins with ט, as in No. 113.

The name Baruk, or rather Paruk, means Made free, as in No. 21, not Blessed, the name of Jeremiah's friend. The word αυτος tells us that the Hebrew line contains the man's name. The name Kelita is certainly Hebrew, the others are probably so.

This was no doubt written by an Alexandrian Jew.

No. 179 [on Plate 14].

זכרן חנוך י עם רק

A memorial for the bondage of Jerusalem, the broken people.

The Chaldee חנוך, a bond or chain, may give us our word חנוך. In Hebrew it means to strangle, as in No. 2.

In this inscription, published by Mr. Grey in fac-simile, the letters ' and ג are strictly the same. From this we can judge of many of the other inscriptions, that the confusion of letters is due, sometimes at least, to the writer, and not the copier.

Note on No. 36b.

During one part of the Maccabee struggle, the city of Jerusalem was held by one party in the State, and the Castle by the other party. This inscription may possibly be a prayer for those within the Castle, as No. 91b is a prayer for those on the outside of the Castle. The two writers may have held opposite opinions as to the struggle.

INDEX OF HEBREW AND CHALDEE WORDS.

The numbers against each word refer to the inscriptions. "Often" means that a word is used about twenty times, and therefore no numbers are added. The letter C. against a word marks that it is to be looked for in the Chaldee Lexicon.

חָבֵב, is willing, 54.	בְּרַחֲתָה, made to flee, 96.
אָכֵן, a stone, 72.	בְּרַחָתָה, made to flee, 44.
אָל, God, 174.	גַּנְגָּה, sore wounded, 125.
אָמֵן, a nation, 105.	גַּמְלָה, a camel, 144, 167.
אָמֹה, a nation, 123.	גַּעַת, lowing, 140.
אָמֵל, feeble, 106.	גַּנְגָּה, the neck, 91, 145, 167.
אָנִי, me, objective, 70.	דְּרָתָה, a decree, 80.
אָנוֹק, to groan, 91.	דְּבָר, sacrificed, 38.

HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS.

HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS,

FROM THE VALLEYS BETWEEN EGYPT

AND

MOUNT SINAI,

IN THEIR ORIGINAL CHARACTERS, WITH TRANSLATIONS AND AN ALPHABET.

PART THE SECOND.

BY SAMUEL SHARPE,

AUTHOR OF "THE HISTORY OF EGYPT."

WITH ~~FOURTEEN~~^{THI} PLATES.

Sephar [or written] the mountain which was of old.

GENESIS x. 30.

And they encamped at mount Shephar.

NUMBERS xxxiii. 23.

Oh that my words were now written !

Oh that they were imprinted on [mount] Sephar,

That with an iron pen and a leaden hammer

They were chieelled into the rock for ever !

LONDON:
WOODFALL AND KINDE, PRINTERS,
NIFORD LANE, STRAND, W.C.

PART the First of this work contains such Inscriptions only as were copied by Mr. Grey. Since printing those pages a friendly hand has supplied me with tracings of the Inscriptions published by Dr. Lepsius in his "Denkmäler aus Ägypten und Äthiopien." Accordingly I now add them to those of Mr. Grey, with transcripts and translations, taking those only which can be most safely read, and leaving those which through faults in the writing or in the copy, I am less able to make use of. Since from the sameness of the thoughts in these Inscriptions very little is gained by increasing their number, I omit those in which I can read little more than the oft recurring words of "Memorial" and "Peace-offering."

I have also carefully examined those Sinaitic Inscriptions which M. Lottin de Laval published for the French Government. But I can make no use of them. They seem to have been copied less carefully than those of Mr. Grey and Dr. Lepsius. M. de Laval is of opinion that the characters are akin to the Demotic alphabet of Egypt, that the writing is the work of the Shepherd inhabitants of the Peninsula, and that the language may be a mixture of the poor dialect of the natives enriched by words borrowed from the Egyptians.

In the case of Dr. Lepsius's Inscriptions, I have kept his numbers, and thus show how many I have omitted. To the numbers I have prefixed the letter L.; and in the same way, when I quote Mr. Grey's Inscriptions, I prefix to the number the letter G.

The characters in Grey's Inscriptions and those in Lepsius's are somewhat differently formed, as is natural when rude lines are copied by different hands; but in no case do we find any difficulty in reading the latter by means of the Alphabet gathered from the former.

Four of Lepsius's Inscriptions speak of the nation as having broken free. These I venture to give to the time of the Maccabee revolt. One long Inscription, or rather series of Inscriptions, L. 164, from Wady Locheān, near to Sarabit el Kadem, not from the barren Wady Mocattein, seems to have been written not by pilgrims from Egypt, but by those who had settled there, and were cultivating the soil as husbandmen. The other Inscriptions are of the same character as Grey's, and are laments for the ruined state of Jerusalem and their country.

In Plate I., I repeat the Alphabet gained from Mr. Grey's copies, with the numbers under each character which refer to his Inscriptions.

All Mr. Grey's Inscriptions in Part the First, except twelve, are from Wady Mocattein. Of Dr. Lepsius's Inscriptions in Part the Second—

No. 3 and 4 are from Nagb el Hani,
9—16	Wady Aleyat,
19—140	Wady Mocattein,
159	Wady Qeneh,
160	Wady Maghara,
161—165	Wady Locheān,
166	Wady Schellāl.

CORRECTIONS TO BE MADE IN PART THE FIRST.

G. 1. For רְוִיחַת קָרֵךְ refresh the smitten, read רְנִיחַת קָרֵךְ make her that hath waited rejoice.

The writer may perhaps allude to Daniel xii. 12, "Blessed is he that hath waited."

G. 18. For צְפָנָה read סְפָנָה, with no change of translation.

G. 23. For שְׁמָךְ רְקָדָן read שְׁמָךְ כְּרָדָן, with no change of translation.

G. 48a, and G. 149a, For הַלֹּא which is not, for the city, read חַלּוּ שָׂעָר Oh that there were help.

G. 55a. For " of Jerusalem,
read = O Jehovah.

G. 78. For נְקָדָן the payment, read נְקָדָה the city vomited forth.

G. 80a, and G. 122. For דָּבָר beloved, read דָּבָר a vow.

G. 113. For שְׁמִירָן, read שְׁמִירָע, with no change of translation.

G. 146c. For נְרָא renowned, read נְרָא broken to pieces.

G. 176 and G. 179, read נְקָדָה פְּנִים favour the trade [or the wealth] of the rejected people.

HEBREW INSCRIPTIONS,

FROM THE

VALLEYS BETWEEN EGYPT AND MOUNT SINAI,

TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED.

L. 3.

שלום בוקא ה קאי :

An empty peace-offering for those vomited forth.

The ב in the second word, and the נ in the last word, are badly formed. The last word is very doubtful ; but the want of a final ס in the plural noun need not trouble us. Its absence may be seen in G. 80a.

It was after the Return from the Captivity, perhaps in the time of Nehemiah, that the expression of “vomiting forth” was used in Leviticus xviii. for driving the Israelites out of their country.

שלום ה חנוק

: גוב נרץ

A peace-offering for her that is strangled, the tail that is crushed.

The last two letters in the first line are doubtful ; but otherwise this is very satisfactory. In Nahum ii. 12, the King of Assyria is said, as a lion, to have strangled the nations around. In

G. 107, the ruined nation is compared to the tail of a sheep cut off; as in Amos iii. 13, Northern Israel is compared to the two legs and an ear of a mangled sheep.

שלום עם הלו על
פרק :

A peace-offering for the people. Oh that there were a lifting up for her that hath broken free.

I take נַי for חֲלֵי. I take הָלֹן for נַי, with נַ, the interjection of exclamation. In the last word, the פ faces the wrong way; it is strictly a ב. This, I suppose, is a mistake of the writer. We have the same word פְרִיק in L. 106, and פְרָק in L. 70. In Grey's Inscriptions we have פְרִק twice, and פְרָק once. In all the בּ is of the same form as the ב.

This may be of the time of the Maccabee revolt.

L. 10a.

שלום מע רקה ה קש :

A peace-offering for the people cast away like stubble.

The תְּמַן is clearly a mistake for תְּמַן. This correction is supplied by G. 23, where we have nearly the same words. In L. 122b, בְּשָׁו has in the same careless way the letters set in the reversed order.

In Psalm xviii. 42 (43) the verb רִיק is used for casting out people as dirt.

As the next inscription, written on the same rock close underneath this, seems to be of the time of the Maccabee independence, this is probably somewhat earlier, perhaps of the time of Antiochus Epiphanes.

L. 10b.

שלום עיר עק פרוק :

A peace-offering for the oppressed city, which has broken free.

The word עַר looks more like זֶר; but the context supports our reading.

This, like L. 9, may be of the time of the Maccabee revolt.

Latter part of L. 12.

שלום עם מק רך :
שמע ישראל :

A peace-offering for the people pining away, ruled over. Hear, O Israel, J[ehovah, &c.].

The two lines are probably by different writers. The second is worse written than the first; if rightly read, it is a quotation from Deut. vi. 4, the grand words in which the Jews proclaim that Jehovah alone is their God.

שלום . . .
עם רומא *
עם רך

A peace-offering . . . a lofty people, a people cast off.

The end of the first line is defaced. In Isaish this word הוּם is used in a bad sense for haughty; perhaps it bears that meaning here.

The last two lines in L. 16.

עם רך :
שלום ה עלה :

The rejected people. A peace-offering for her that hath been taken off [or destroyed].

These letters are badly formed, but not doubtful. In L. 9 and elsewhere, I have taken לְ as for לִי, a lifting up. Here I follow Psalm cii. 24 (25), where לְהָ is rendered as above.

L. 19.

: שָׁלֹם
ע
ן רָק

For a peace-offering; favour her that is cast off.

I take the letter ו for the preposition לְ, as seven times in Grey and six times here. This may be one of the more modern of the inscriptions, if we may judge of the shape of the ר. The three words (treating the ו as a prefix) have the characters in each joined into a group.

This custom of dropping the feeble ל in לְ, may be seen in the word נַפְלֵ, to take, which drops its ל when it receives an inflection at the beginning. It also supports the conjecture that the article ו was originally written לְ, like the Arabic article لِكَ.

L. 21a.

שָׁלֹם : שָׁלֹם
לֹא
קָרְחָה :

For a peace-offering. Support her that is cast off, cut short.

The last letter in לֹא is the only doubtful character.

L. 21b.

שָׁלֹם קָרְחָה יְהוָה
קָרְחָה :

A bold peace-offering, O Jehovah, for those cut short.

I take קָרְחָה as a mistake for קָרְבָּן. The final ן is missing from the last word, as in L. 3.

L. 21c.

וְ שָׁלֹם :

The vow of a peace-offering.

The ר hangs down below the ו, as is often the case. In G. 87, we have the same word רָגָ, a vow. It may be from נָרָג, to consecrate as a Nazarite.

L. 22.

שָׁלֹם עֲזָבָה :

A peace-offering for her that is forsaken.

This is spoken of Jerusalem, which in Nehemiah's time, when the walls were being rebuilt, was told in Isaiah lxii. 4, "Thou shalt no more be called forsaken." The same word is used in each case.

L. 25a.

שָׁלֹם עַם : הָלוּ עַזָּר
רָן עַי רָקְחָה :

A peace-offering for the people. Oh that there were help. Make the emptied ruined heap rejoice, O Jehovah.

In the last word in the first line the letters are badly grouped. But other inscriptions would lead us to read עַזָּר, and those letters may be found in it. The ו hangs down from the י.

This seems to belong to a time of hopefulness, and it may be one of our older inscriptions.

L. 25b.

שָׁלֹם חֶרֶב
עַל הַרְבֵּן :

A peace-offering for what has been determined. Raise up the crushed one.

Daniel ix. 27, using the same word חֶרֶב, threatens "that which has been determined shall be poured out on the desolator," the Roman empire. The second line is written to rhyme with the first.

This may be of the time of the Christian era, when the words of Daniel were much studied.

L. 33.

שְׁלָמָם עִם רַקֵּב
שְׁלָחוֹת :

A peace-offering for the people rejected, sent away.

The two letters in the middle of the last word are doubtful.

L. 34.

כְּרֻון קָה
צָק חָן ד
צָק עָרָר
נָק נָרוֹת נָהָדִי
קָז יְרוֹו :

A memorial for her that is cut short. Favour the rejected, naked, guiltless one. Consecrate the lamentation of her that is cut short, O Jehovah.

This is very clearly written. The words רָצֶב and רָצֶב, we have had in Grey's Inscriptions, and shall meet with again. In Part I., I remarked upon יְרוֹו for Jehovah, supposing that the middle letter was purposely left unfinished, and that it represented הָרָוֹ.

שְׁלָמָם עַק וְקָא צָנוֹן
וְרָנוֹת קָהָן :

A peace-offering for her that is crushed, purified, afflicted. And make to rejoice her that is lean and cut short.

I take קָהָן for קָהָן; but the word is doubtful. The conjunc-

L. 45.

שְׁלָמָם מִסְפָּט
עַם חֲמֹוק :

A peace-offering from the tribute of one trodden down, wandering.

The first letter in צָנוֹן is doubtful. So also is the meaning of חֲמֹוק; but in Cant. v. 6, and Jerem. xxxi. 22, the verb חֲמֹק seems to bear the meaning here given to it.

L. 53.

שְׁלָמָם הַקְּצָא
:=

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, O Jehovah.

The single character in the second line might be read as וּ; but I venture to take it as the two strokes, the symbol for the word Jehovah, which are seen four, or rather five, times in Part I., and are here followed by a stop. (See G. 129, and G. 146.)

L. 61.

שְׁלָמָם סָאה צָוֵק
וְיהָוָה :

A peace-offering for her that is vomited out, oppressed, O Jehovah.

Or, if we take the last letter but one in the upper line to be צָוֵק, it may be read as סָאה צָוֵק, her that is cut short, guiltless.

L. 67.

שלם יר זקא :
חרם ה נרוכ שלם :

A peace-offering for the purified city. Utterly destroy him that magnifieth himself in his garments.

In Grey's Inscriptions we often have יְרֵי for יְרֵי. Our one doubtful character is that which I have ventured to unravel as נָרֹב. The upright stroke with which it begins might be ל, ת, or ג. From it hangs ר. The last letter is ב. If the line rising upwards from the ב is a letter, it is ו. Perhaps it is to be omitted.

The writer may mean to blame those who take office under the foreign masters of Jerusalem, and walk about in foreign robes, who are blamed for so doing in Zeph. i. 8.

ונרין בלי ק
א לום ה רש ירו :

A memorial lest the poor people should be vomited forth, O Jehovah.

This may be one of the more modern inscriptions. The ה in the upper line is of the Greek form, while that in the lower line is of the older form.

L. 70.

שלם פראך
רנין זק ירו

A peace-offering for her that hath broken free. Make her that is purified rejoice triumphantly, O Jehovah.

In G. 88, and G. 91, we also have רנין, the Pilpel of נן, to rejoice.

This is probably of the time of the Maccabee revolt.

Last line of L. 76.

שם ה עיר זה : רם רוח :

Establish the city which is loosened [or removed]. Raise up, refresh.

For we have רַחֲדָה. The final ח is formed like the Greek H. The word יְרֵי for city, instead of יְרֵי, we have often. This is not unnatural, as יְרֵי has יְרִיכָה for its plural.

L. 78.

וּכְרִין עָה נָק
א : רֶם רָק כְּשׁוֹ :

A memorial for the guiltless ruin; raise up her that is rejected like stubble.

The last letter in נָק is uniformed and doubtful. This inscription is like G. 28.

L. 79a.

ע שלם ה דק נרוכ סלה :

For a peace-offering for the statute rejected; do thou pardon.

The word נרוכ is doubtful; but it may be the Niphal of רוק, to cast out.

L. 79b.

שלום ה צום :

A peace-offering for the fast.

This is very probably by the same hand as the foregoing. The fast was in the seventh month, soon after the autumnal equinox. In L. 164 we have an inscription at the time of the Passover.

Latter part of L. 87.

חצב : קם שנ ה קא יר זק
מ שנו מ :

Hewn down. Raise up, change her that is vomited forth, the purified city. From two.

In the first word, the ש is divided into the two letters pw, as is often the case. The ב is not wholly formed. The word wp is doubtful.

This sentence may be incomplete at the beginning. The second line means that this is a votive inscription on behalf of two persons, perhaps a man and his wife. The two crosses, one on each side of the second line, tell us that they were both Christians. The crosses have the form of the Egyptian hieroglyphic for Life.

L. 91a.

זכרן שלם קאה צוק :

A memorial, a peace-offering for her that is vomited forth, oppressed.

The letter כ is badly formed.

This is nearly the same as L. 61.

L. 91b.

ע זכרן קוּץ
ער ענו ה עה . . .

For a memorial for her that is cut short, the afflicted city, which is ruined, &c.

The rest of the second line is uncertain.

זכרן חוץ
א עם ריק ירו :

A memorial for the outside, the rejected people, O Jehovah.

In G. 91 and L. 127c, we have the word נזוץ; and in G. 25 we have גָּזַת. I understand the word as meaning the Jews scattered abroad, in "the Dispersion."

L. 100a.

שלום לם הלו עורי
ה קש הלו עור יהו :

A peace-offering for the people. Oh that there were help for the stubble. Oh that there were help, O Jehovah.

As in several of our inscriptions the people are said to be cast out like stubble, here they are directly spoken of as stubble.

L. 100b.

שלום ענו הלו עור
א רן קומ נק :

A peace-offering for her that is afflicted. Oh that there were help. Make to rejoice, raise up her that is guiltless.

The whole is very clearly written; but the ר and the מ in the lower line are doubtful.

L. 101.

ל שלם ה קרצא קובר נרנע :

For a peace-offering for her that is destroyed, buried, at rest.

The last word is wholly conjectural. It begins with רנ, and seems to end with y, but the character joined to the y is unlike any of our letters.

As the noun קַרְעָה means destruction, the verb may be rendered as above. We have קִבּוֹר, buried, in L. 164*h*.

L. 102*a*.

ע שֵׁלֶם קְהֻצָּא עִיר וְקִיּוֹ :
רַן קְמַטָּק
אֲרָ :

For a shortened peace-offering for the purified city, O Jehovah. Make to rejoice, raise up her that is pining away, cursed.

The letter □ of the first line hangs down into the second, where it has an unexplained p on each side of it. Hence I am led to conjecture that it is not only to be read in both lines, as in G. 65 and G. 138, but further, that in the second line it is to be read twice, first at the end of the word □p, and then at the beginning of the word p□. This conjecture meets with some support from the custom in the pointed MSS., of putting a Daghesh, or point, in the bosom of a letter, and then reading it as a double letter. The נָשׁ in the third line is badly written, with the נ hanging down from the beginning, not from the end of the other letter.

For פִּתְ, purified, we might equally well read פִּגְ, guiltless.

The whimsical treatment of the letter □ proves this to be a rather modern inscription, written at a time when the Alexandrian scribes were indulging themselves in fanciful penmanship.

L. 102*b*.

שֵׁלֶם אַמְּה עִי אֲרָ :

A peace-offering for the nation, the heap of ruins which is cursed.

The word אַמְּה is Chaldee, and used often in Daniel.

L. 102*c*.

עַל שֵׁם רָע : רַן הַעֲשֵׂר רַק :

For an unworthy peace-offering. Make ta rejoice the ruined heap of the rejected city.

The word שֵׁלֶם is without its middle letter. The last word is doubtful. Perhaps it should be read as קַרְעָה, crushed. The second נ is in form very close to the Syriac letter.

L. 104*a*.

שֵׁלֶם שָׁוֹק רַקָּא
עַנוּ רַק יְהֹוָה :

A peace-offering of a rejected leg, for the afflicted one who is rejected, O Jehovah.

The □ is badly formed.

(See Exod. xxix. 22, and Lev. vii. 32, for the offering of an animal's leg, called a shoulder in the A. V.)

L. 104*b*.

שֵׁלֶם קְרָב רַק
וְנִ פְּרָקִיּוֹ :

A peace-offering for her that is blasphemed, rejected. Make her that hath broken free rejoice.

The i in פְּרָקִיּוֹ is like a p, as is the ' in וְנִ. These I think mistakes. The n in קְרָב is a loop between the two letters.

This may be of the Maccabec time.

L. 105a and b.

שלום הלא רק לב :
שלום אָר לְבָן קְהֻן :

A peace-offering for her that is cast off, crushed in heart. A peace-offering for her that is cursed in heart. Show favour to her that is cut short.

These are two inscriptions, but the letters in one touch those in the other. The word רָא is doubtful.

L. 105c.

שלום לום : הַל
ו עירא נוק :

A peace-offering for the people. Oh that there were help for her that is purified.

The word עירא is badly written; but we have it in L. 163a, following the word הַל.

L. 106a.

שלום קהן : קם רהך
שי ה לם רצק :

A shortened peace-offering. Raise up the rejected . . . the ruined heap of the crushed people.

L. 106b.

שלום : הלו רם צו
עם רך :

A peace-offering. Oh that He would raise up the [fast or affliction?] of the rejected people.

The last letter in the upper line is incomplete. The word may be מִצְרָא, a fast.

This inscription and the foregoing seem to be by the same hand.

L. 109.

שלום רנו קצק ה נקא :
שועה עם :

A peace-offering of rejoicing cut short for her that is guiltless. A cry for help for the people.

Or the last line might be read שׁועה עם, save ye the people.

We have usually had the verb רָנֵן, in the imperative mood רָנֶן, do thou make to rejoice. The נ in the second line closely resembles the Syriac letter.

L. 110.

וכרן ה זבח רך "
הנה קהן יהו :

A memorial of the rejected sacrifice for Jerusalem, here on the outside, O Jehovah.

This explains the word "memorial" as meaning a portion of a sacrifice, and also the word "outside" as meaning away from home. (See L. 114, L. 115, and L. 166, for "meaning Jerusalem. In Grey's Inscriptions it has that force eleven times.)

L. 112.

שלום עיר נקא
יעס : הלו שער :

A peace-offering for the guiltless city, trodden down. Oh that there were help.

The ז in the upper line is conjectural. The word יְמִין must be taken as meant for the participle of מִתְּמִין.

L. 113.

שָׁלֵם חֹן הַ רָק
א עֲזִי קְמִ יְהוָה :

*A peace-offering. Favour her that is rejected, the ruined heap.
Raise up, O Jehovah.*

L. 114.

שָׁלֵם קְהֻן יְיָ לֶם מְקָן נְקָן :

A shortened peace-offering for Jerusalem, a people pining away and guiltless.

L. 115.

שָׁלֵם עַם נְקָן
רָחָן יְהוָה :

*A peace-offering for the guiltless people of Jerusalem. Accept,
O Jehovah.*

The ר is of the modern form. The badly written word יְהֻן may be noticed as supporting our reading of that word elsewhere, as in L. 163c, and L. 161d, where it is yet worse written.

L. 116.

ע שָׁלֵם הַ עֲנֵה
רֹן עַם רָזֶן מְבּוּה :

For a peace-offering for her that is afflicted. Make to rejoice the rejected despised people.

L. 119.

שָׁלֵם הַ לֶם צָק
א עַם רָק
שְׁעַדְךָ יְהוָה :

*A peace-offering for the oppressed nation, the rejected people.
Save her that is rejected, O Jehovah.*

Here and elsewhere מְנַחָה might be read as מְלֻחָה, beaten down.

L. 120a.

וְכָרְדָן קְהֻנָּתָא
וְהַלְהָא רָצָן :

A memorial for her that is cut short, and cast off, rejected.

The first word is badly written. The ו confirms that in L. 119. For the י, see L. 114.

L. 120b.

שָׁלֵם נְשָׁה נְקָא קְהֻן :

A peace-offering for her that is plundered, guiltless, cut short.

The strict meaning of נְשָׁה is plundered by usurers.

L. 120c.

שָׁלֵם הַ
קְנָא
יְהוָה :

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, O Jehovah.

The word Jehovah is written three times, in the writer's doubt which was the proper way to spell it.

L. 120d.

וְכָרְדָן הַ עַם רָקָא חֹן רָשָׁן :

A memorial for the people cast out. Favour the poor.

This reminds us of the Apostle Paul's care for the poor of Jerusalem.

L. 121a.

זכור ה לחץ : קרו^נ
ה לם נבוק יחו :

A memorial for her that is afflicted. The horn of the people is empty, O Jehovah.

The first word can only be read by the help of other inscriptions. The lower part of the letter כ turns back towards the foregoing letter. The horn is generally an emblem of pride in the Bible, like that of a stag. Here it is the Alexandrian cornucopia.

L. 121b.

זכור חלבה : רן חנו רן
מוך זק :

A memorial of fat. Make to rejoice, favour, accept her that has cleansed herself, is purified.

The mention of fat justifies our considering the memorial as a memorial offering. The word מוך may be taken as active participle in Hiphil of חלה, וְכַה, to be clean.

L. 122a.

שלם חרל נקא
עיר זק :

A peace-offering for her that is failing, guiltless, the city which is purified.

L. 122b.

שלם רקא
קחץ מושעה :

A peace-offering for her that is cast off, cut short, threshed out.

The first character, a group of the usual three letters, is written backwards. The last character in the inscription is now joined together.

L. 122c.

ע שלם קהלו ו רש נרחק ירו :

For a peace-offering of no honour and poor, for her that is rejected, O Jehovah.

The w faces the wrong way.

L. 122d.

שלם ה נשם שען :

A peace-offering for her that is destroyed. Do thou support.

We may take נשם as the Niphal of שם.

L. 123.

נכחר זדר נר : רן עכבר נכרע עיר איר נחר נאר :

... made strange, cast away, plowed up. Make to rejoice her that is troubled, bowed down, the city that is cursed, flooded, abhorred.

This is written most carefully and neatly, but unfortunately with more attention to elegance than to distinctness. It seems necessary to take the simple upright stroke as נ; we have it six times. The second word, which I read as זדר, is very peculiar. Each ר is an horizontal stroke, as is the r. That the ruined city should be said to be plowed up is not unnatural; that it should be said to be flooded, may be explained by Isaiah xviii. 2, where the Assyrians and Babylonians are spoken of as rivers.

ט זכרו ה קזא : חן צרי רק יהו :

Part of a memorial for her that is cut short. Favour the troubles of her that is rejected, O Jehovah.

This is G. 178 (Plate 13, No. 1) in Part I. It differs in several letters from Mr Grey's copy; and we are thus reminded of the want of other careful copies.

L. 127c.

שלום חוצה עי ה ריק :

A peace-offering for the outside of the ruined heap which is rejected.

This, like L. 110, is for the Jews scattered in the Dispersion.

L. 136.

נמל בקע עם נק :

Remove [literally, cut off] the breach of the guiltless people.

The first word, three letters grouped into one character, is doubtful.

L. 139.

שלום עי זב : לו עור עקר ו
עקר : הדל עור יהו :

A peace-offering for the ruined heap which is failing. Oh that there were help for her that is rooted up, fleeing away. Oh that there were help, O Jehovah.

L. 140.

שלום ה קזא דל ריק זב יהו :

A peace-offering for her that is cut short, needy, broken, persecuted, pining away, O Jehovah.

The letter ד is badly formed. The writer was fond of alliteration.

L. 159.

שלום שטן ה ריש רע : שם זה קם שק יהו :

A peace-offering, a cry for help of her that is poor, is hurt. Establish her that is removed; raise up the sackcloth, O Jehovah.

The word pw is doubtful; but sackcloth is a figure for grief in the Bible.

L. 160.

שלום חן ה צ
ס קש יהן :

A peace-offering; favour the cruel fast, O Jehovah.

I take מְצַח for מְצָח.

L. 161.

זכרין
רווח עי קצק זק
א ו קד נקא יהו :

A memorial. Refresh the ruined heap, cut short, purified, and bowed down; guiltless, O Jehovah.

Such I have no doubt is the writer's meaning. It may be safely gleaned by a comparison with other inscriptions. But, taken by itself, this is in many letters illegible. For the ו in רווח, see the ו in ירק, L. 162a.

L. 162a.

זְכָרֵן קַשָּׁה קָרֹן עִם רָזֶק יְרוֹן :

A grievous memorial for the horn of the rejected people, O Jehovah.

Here the word horn is perhaps used in its Biblical sense; though certainly we might read, The horn of the people is empty, using the word as in L. 121a. But the above is to be preferred.

L. 162b.

שְׁלָמָם עִיר : הַלּוּ עִיר
אֲנָלָק יְרוֹן :

A peace-offering for the city. Oh that there were help for her that is licked up, O Jehovah.

In G. 46, 143, &c., we have the verb נָלַק, meaning to destroy. Our word נָלַק may be its Niphal. Or we might remove the נ from שְׁלָמָם, and read נָלַק אָן, will it not be licked up? (See the following, where we have the same difficulty.)

L. 162c.

זְכָרֵן : רָנוֹ לְצָא עִיר עַק
אֲן רַצּוֹן שָׁעָק נָנָן :

A memorial. Make to rejoice her that is despised, the oppressed city; otherwise it is crushed, fleeing away, guiltless.

The word רַצּוֹן is very doubtful, and hence we are left in doubt about the word נָנָן, as in the foregoing. But we have רַצּוֹן for רַצּוֹן often.

L. 163a.

שְׁנָה עִי עָה : לְזָוָרָא קַחְזָן :

Change the ruined heap of ruins. Oh that there were help for her that is cut short.

G. 40 and G. 127 both begin with this word, Change meaning Restore. The same word was also used when proposing a political revolution in the state, as is explained by Proverbs xxiv. 21:—

My son, fear thou God and the king;
And meddle not with them that are given to change.

L. 163b.

זְכָרֵן קַבְרָא
הַנְּצָזָן נָהָג :

A memorial for her that is buried, that has fled away, led away, O Jehovah.

The two strokes at the end are for Jehovah, as five times in Grey's Inscriptions. The ג is reversed in position, but clearly written. We have the thought of the nation having been buried in L. 101, and L. 164.

L. 163c.

זְכָרֵן קַחְזָן : רָנוֹ = מְנָה נָלָק יְרוֹן :

A memorial of her that is cut short. Make to rejoice, O Jehovah, the portion licked up, O Jehovah.

The two strokes in the middle of this sentence I read as Jehovah, notwithstanding the closing word. This latter is very badly formed. The פ in נָלָק is also badly formed.

L. 163d.

שלם שוע : הלו יורה קהץ יהו :

A peace-offering, a cry for help. Oh that there were help for her that is cut short, O Jehovah.

The word יורה is a mistake for יורא. The flourishing form of the word ירע explains the same in the foregoing.

L. 163e.

שלם נרי : חן ריש Km ה רצא עם רוד :

A peace-offering of the plowmen. Favour the poor; raise up the crushed, the people who are subdued [or restless].

The meaning of the Hebrew word רוד is open to doubt.

The word נרי, plowmen, which is perfectly clear, we shall meet with again in L. 164. This was written by men cultivating the soil in Wady Locheân.

L. 163f.

שלם עם מק רקא ריק :

A peace-offering for the people who are pining away, quite cast out.

The six inscriptions of L. 163 are very satisfactory.

L. 164a.

ע שלם חג : זעק קמת וריך אח עריה קש :

For a peace-offering for the feast. There is a cry, "The standing corn hath scattered [its seed], alas, the stubble is made naked."

Here Jerusalem is forgotten; the husbandman is thinking about his crop, at the time of the Passover. Every letter is perfect; but the one כ is of a different form from the other. An approach is made towards dividing the sentence into its words; as four of the words have their letters joined, and a fifth partially so. (See the same division of the words in L. 19.)

L. 164b.

ע שלם ברחה לו נק : זעק מיר הלו עור יהו :

For a peace-offering of food. Oh that it were guiltless. There is a bitter cry, Oh that there were help, O Jehovah.

I translate ברחה as if it were food. The letters פְּנִי I read as פְּנַי, thinking the last is incomplete.

This may be a prayer for the harvest, wishing the corn פָּנִים, perhaps clean, free from blight, rather than guiltless, as rendered above.

L. 164c.

שלם רוד הרקק הלק יהו :

A peace-offering for her that is subdued, rejected, licked up, O Jehovah.

The word הלק may be the Hiphil of פָּלַךְ.

L. 164e.

שלם חן ל עיר קהץ :

A peace-offering, for favour unto the city which is cut short.

The ל is in the form of ר.

L. 164f.

שלם חן רץ : רן עיר מק :

A peace-offering. Show favour, accept, make to rejoice the city which is pining away.

L. 164g.

שלום לום : הלו עליה רן עם מוק עננא :

A peace-offering for the people. Oh that He would arise and make to rejoice the people pining away, afflicted.

The last word may perhaps be פְּנֵי.

L. 164h.

ו שָׁלֹם חַנּוֹ : קִם עַמְּךָ הַ וְרִ יְהֹוָה :
קְבָּהָר וְרִ : לְמַ קְבָּרְ רַן . . .

Also a peace-offering for the feast. Raise up her who is afflicted from the foreigner, O Jehovah. Bury the foreigner. The people are buried. Make to rejoice . . .

I take פְּנֵי for פְּנֵי. The ה in קְבָּהָר is doubtful. The word חַנּוֹ is badly written. The נ is like our printed נ. The ת in וְרִ is like וְ.

L. 164i.

שלום נֶר זָקֵן חַן שָׂוָרָה :

A peace-offering for the old plowman. Favour the furrows.

This is written clearly. The first ר hangs down from the top of the נ; the second hangs from the נ. I take נֶר as from נִיר, to plow, and שָׂוָרָה as the plural of שָׂוָרָה, the furrow in which the corn is sown, of Isaiah xxviii. 25.

The subject-matter of our inscription is not foreign from that of L. 164a, but for a later season in the year. That was of the time of the harvest in April, this of the time of plowing.

L. 164j.

שלום מושק רַן יְהֹוָה :

A peace-offering of drink. Make to rejoice, O Jehovah.

The word Jehovah is incomplete. From קַשְׁשׁ, to drink, we have מושק, a participle. As L. 164b was an offering of food, this is of drink.

L. 164k.

שלום הַ לְמַ רְבָּ נֶקְעַק רַן :

A peace-offering for the great nation which is guiltless, oppressed, crushed.

L. 164l.

ו שָׁלֹם מְ וּרְעָה :

Also a peace-offering from the seed.

This series of inscriptions in L. 164, all perfectly legible with the exception of L. 164d, is by Jews living in the valley, and cultivating the soil. They are of a late date. Epiphanius, writing about A.D. 350, says (Haeres. xx. Opera i. p. 46) that some of the Nazarenes, or Jewish Christians, had fled from Lower Egypt to Arabia, meaning, no doubt, the neighbourhood of Sinai. But we have no sign of Christianity in L. 164.

L. 165a.

שלום עַק רְמַק אָ
קְרַצְקָ : זְכָרְןִ יְהֹוָה :

A peace-offering for her that is oppressed ; raise up her that is vomited forth, cut short ; a memorial to Jehovah.

We have פְּנֵי in L. 161.

L. 165b.

וכרן רע ל עיר עם רק :

An unworthy memorial for the city of the rejected people.

L. 165c.

וכרן ירו
ה קץ רוק נוק ירו
בל כל רוק : הלו על רוק שלם :

A memorial to Jehovah for her that is cut short, rejected, purified, O Jehovah ; lest she be wholly rejected, O Jehovah. Oh that there were for the injured and rejected a salvation.

The ' is a Roman L reversed. Here בָּשׂוּ must be rendered salvation, not as elsewhere, a peace-offering.

L. 166.

שלם עז זה יער נכו :
יעק הלו יהו :

A peace-offering for the ruined heap, this Jerusalem, the city which is smitten. There is a cry, "Praise ye Jehovah."

The pronoun זֶה before the " is a strong proof that we are right in rendering these two strokes as Jerusalem. The word "city" is taken as a noun of multitude, and has a plural verb. The middle letter in the word Jehovah is badly written ; but the words "Hallelu Jsho" cannot be mistaken.
